RUFFIANISM IN CONGRESS

A DISGRACEFUL TUMULT IN THE LOWER HOUSE.

GEN. WEAVER DENOUNCES MR. SPARKS AS A LIAR, AND MR. SPARKS SAYS GEN. WEAVER IS A SCOUNDREL—THE ANGRY MEN RUSH FOR EACH OTHER, BUT ARE SEPARATED BY FRIENDS.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—"In the presence of the House of Representatives I denounce you as a liar," and "I denounce you as an unmitigated scoundrel." Such were the expressions employed in the House this afternoon by Messrs. Weaver, of Iowa, and Sparks, of Illinois, in addressing each other, and the offensive words produced a scene of tumult and disorder which has not been excelled by the most disgraceful exhibitions of "plantation manners" that were so frequent in Congress prior to the rebellion. Since the days when Southern bullies terrorized Congress, there have been many disgraceful altercations in the House, in which unparliamentary and offensive language has been hurled by members at each other, but until to-day no instance is known when the disputants madly struggled with those who held them for the privilege of pommeling each other like two common bruisers.

The disturbance arose during a discussion on the Funding bill, a measure from the consideration of which no one would suspect a disgraceful riot could possibly arise. Mr. Wood succeeded, early in the afternoon, in having the bill taken up, and Mr. Gillette, a Greenbacker, of Iowa, opened the debate by reading a long speech against it. Upon concluding, he yielded the remainder of his hour to his colleague, Mr. Weaver, who was the Greenback candidate for President at the late election. Mr. Weaver said he would prefer to take an hour to speak against the bill on a future day, and no one else claiming the floor, Mr. Wood moved to proceed to the consideration of the bill by sections, under the five-minute rule. This irritated Mr. Mills, of Texas, who proceeded, in his peculiarly fervid and boisterous manner, to denounce the "money power," and, in an offensive tone, said Mr. Wood should not permit his interest for Wall-street bankers to lead him so far as to attempt to force a bill of so much importance to a vote, in view of the fact that so many members were absent. To this uncalled-for fling Mr. Wood made a dignified reply. He had no interest in Wall-street bankers. The bill was necessary to sustain the credit and honor of the Government, and it was his duty to urge its passage at the earliest practicable day. It was not sufficient to say that members were not now prepared to speak, nor could delay be urged because certain members were so unmindful of their public duties as to absent themselves from the sessions of the House. Mr. Weaver had said that he would use every parliamentary method to defeat the passage of any refunding bill, and the demand that the bill should be laid aside to give members a chance to prepare speeches was only another device to prevent refunding. If any one desired to speak he was prepared to listen, but would not consent to wait the convenience of members to prepare speeches. Mr. Dunnell came to the defense of Mr. Wood, and commended his course in striving to provide for the funding of maturing bonds, and Speaker Randall, who was on the floor, also came to Mr. Wood's support. After urging the necessity of early action, the Speaker skillfully diverted the angry discussion that was threatened by Messrs. Mills, Bland, and others, who wanted delay, by making an argument on the merits of the general proposition to refund in a low-rate bond; but, unfortunately, his remarks gave rise to a running debate, into which Mr. Weaver was drawn, and thus the ground was prepared for the disgraceful exhibition which terminated the day's proceedings.

Mr. Weaver, by a series of questions from both sides of the House, was encouraged to make the speech which he had previously declined to make, and during his remarks produced from a scrap-book the financial resolutions adopted by the several National Democratic Conventions held since 1868, and showed the great inconsistency of that party on finance and currency. "The Democratic Party," said Mr. Weaver, "has camped regularly upon the same ground vacated by the Republican Party two years before the Democratic tents were pitched." He also produced the financial resolutions of the various State Democratic Conventions, and held them up to the ridicule, and occasionally criticised the position of the Republican Party on financial questions, but gave the party credit for consistently opposing the issue of silver and additional paper money. Mr. Weaver's arraignment of the Democracy was severely truthful, and therefore exasperating to the more irritable of the Democratic members. His defense and explanation of his own Presidential campaign, as the Greenback candidate, showed that he was not only familiar with his subject, but that he possess far greater ability as a debater and force and courage as a political leader than he has hitherto been credited with. At times a dozen Democratic members would jump to their feet, gesticulating under his excoriations, to propound questions or to break the force of his arraignment of their party. Mr. Weaver answered all of them good-naturedly, but in most cases with a humorous sarcasm that provoked laughter and applause from the Republican side, thus adding to the irritation of those who persisted in interrupting him.

Finally, Mr. Weaver and Mr. Bland got into a colloquy of a somewhat personal character, in which Mr. Sparks, a member from Illinois, who is noted for pomposity of manner and irritability of temper, unnecessarily intruded himself. During the merriment caused by one of Mr. Weaver's stinging replies to Mr. Bland's questions, Mr. Sparks was heard to say, "That is a falsehood." In the prevailing confusion Mr. Weaver evidently could not determine which of his interlocutors made the offensive remark, and therefore took no notice of it.

When Mr. Weaver had concluded, Mr. Bland obtained the floor and made some very good points against Mr. Weaver's record in and out of the House, as a Greenbacker, and repeated the charges made against him during the Presidential campaign of having a secret understanding with the Republicans for the advantage of the Garfield Electoral ticket. Mr. Weaver attempted several times to correct these damaging allegations, but Mr. Bland refused to yield, and thus Mr. Weaver was forced to wait until he could obtain the floor in his own right. The debate had thus far wandered entirely from the Refunding bill, and the hall of the House bore more resemblance to a mass-meeting than a deliberative assembly. Members clustered about the disputants and freely applauded the points they made against each other, while the Chairman, Mr. Covert, of New-York, lost all control of the House.

When Mr. Bland had concluded his remarks Mr. Weaver again took the floor, and pronounced the allegations that he had proved disloyal to the Greenback Party as false. As he was about concluding his remarks, Mr. Sparks arose, and referring to the episode between himself, Bland, and Weaver, already described, proceeded to make an explanation. He said that the offensive words were the result of a misunderstanding. He did not intend to say that a statement made by Mr. Weaver was false, but that a certain allegation that had been made by some one else was false. Mr. Weaver seemed satisfied with the explanation. Of course it proceeded from a misunderstanding, but in a good-natured manner he cautioned Mr. Sparks against the free use of such terms as "falsehood" and "liar." Many events that occurred in the House of Representatives had necessarily to be overlooked, but it should not be forgotten that "falsehood" and "liar" were regarded in some localities as fighting words, and if those terms were applied to him outside of the House and within reach of his arm, he would strike the man who uttered them. This was delivered without any apparent feeling on Mr. Weaver's part, but it was a palpable hit at Mr. Sparks, who, in a moment of passion, and without the slightest provocation, called Mr. Clymer a liar during a colloquy on the Army bill last Winter.

The applause that greeted Mr. Weaver's reply to Mr. Sparks added to the discomfiture of that gentleman and caused him to lose his temper completely. He made some rejoinder to Mr. Weaver that could not be heard in the gallery because of the confusion, but Mr. Weaver was heard to say, in his usual cool way: "It is all right. You have made an apology. I would not harm a hair of your head; but don't make any mistake about me. My fighting weight is 185 pounds, and my address is Bloomfield, Iowa."

This increased the general merriment and increased Mr. Sparks's anger. Shaking his fist at Mr. Weaver he shouted: "I have a contempt for that man's arm. It can't be used to hurt me. The manner in which he received my explanation shows that he is not a gentleman, a fact of which his conduct in the Presidential campaign has given abundant proof."

At this point, for the first time during the long controversy, Mr. Weaver lost his temper, and replied to Mr. Sparks by saying: "In the presence of the House of Representatives I denounce you as a liar."

This explosion startled the House, which had been silenced by the belligerent attitude of the two principals, and members rushed down the aisles and crowded about them. "And I denounce you as an unmitigated scoundrel," rejoined the irate Sparks.

The two men, during this exchange of compliments, were standing within six or eight feet of each other. Mr. Sparks stood at Mr. Ewing's desk, which is in the front row on the Democratic side, and Mr. Weaver stood on the same side, at the desk of Mr. Carlisle, which is third from the front row on the main aisle. For a moment after Mr. Sparks's retort Mr. Weaver stood motionless, gazing at his burly antagonist, as if selecting an advantageous point for attack. Buttoning his coat, he moved rapidly toward Mr. Sparks, who, in the meantime had sat down. Mr. Weaver arrived almost within arm's reach of his foe before the surrounding members recovered from their astonishment and realized that an actual fight was imminent. As Mr. Weaver drew back his arm to strike he was seized by several members, and at the same time Mr. Sparks, who had hurriedly regained his feet and pushed his chair violently into the aisle, was also seized and firmly held by friends. Both men were in the area in front of the Speaker's desk, struggling to free themselves that they might come together, and while attention was concentrated on the two belligerents a danger was threatening the Illinois member from another direction. Mr. Jones, a Greenbacker of Texas, who sits near Mr. Weaver, bounded into the arena, and pushing through the crowd began to remove his coat, exclaiming: "If there is to be a fight over this, I want to have a hand." Mr. Jones, however, was not allowed to "take a hand," nor was he allowed to remove his coat, several members firmly seizing him and forcing him back to his seat.

At this time the commotion on the floor of the House had the appearance of a mob fight, and from the galleries it looked as though such a termination was inevitable. At least three members were struggling to encounter each other in combat, and at least 60 others were wrestling and shouting to prevent the threatened conflict. Speaker Randall hurriedly resumed the chair, hustling Mr. Covert without ceremony, and at once began a violent tattoo on the desk with his gavel, at the same time shouting for the Sergeant-at-Arms to come forward and restore order. In the midst of the uproar some wag from the rear of the hall shouted: "Trot out the American eagle," referring to the silver mace surmounted by that bird, which is the emblem of the authority of the House when borne by the Sergeant-at-Arms. Finally, Sergeant-at-Arms Thompson made his appearance, bearing the silver mace, and parading with it among the members forced them to be seated, thus quelling the disorder.

A motion was thereupon made to adjourn, but the Speaker said the Committee of the Whole must first formally rise and report to the House. Mr. Covert tremblingly went back to the chair, when Mr. Weaver, who had resumed his place at Mr. Carlisle's desk, claimed his right to the floor. A motion was made that the committee rise, to which Mr. Weaver said: "I will yield for that motion." This was agreed to. The committee thereupon rose, and the Chairman reported that the committee had had the Refunding bill under consideration, but had come to no resolution thereon. The House then adjourned, but many members lingered in the hall for some time, discussing the disgraceful scenes of the day. It is probable that notice will be taken in the House to-morrow of the conduct of the two members who were responsible for the mêlée. Considerable sympathy is expressed on all sides for Mr. Weaver, and while no one defends his conduct, the feeling is general that Mr. Sparks is mainly responsible for the fracas. Mr. Sparks is a man of large physique, and is fully a head taller than Mr. Weaver, who is a man of medium size, with indications of great muscular strength, bodily activity, and personal courage. In disposition he is the opposite of Mr. Sparks, who is blustering and domineering in his manner and cross and irritable toward all who differ with him. His service in the House has been marked by great pretension rather than fair ability, and he is not popular even with his political associates. He is Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and the only man on that committee who is a stranger to military service. It is not likely that there will be any further hostile demonstration on the part of Messrs. Sparks and Weaver.

JUDGE STRONG'S SUCCESSOR.

A LARGE VOTE IN FAVOR OF JUDGE WOODS—CONFIRMATION PREVENTED BY THE LACK OF A QUORUM.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—A considerable part of the Senate's executive session to-day was consumed in discussing the nomination of Judge William B. Woods, of Georgia, to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court. The nomination was brought before the Senate on a favorable report from the Judiciary Committee, but immediately encountered opposition on the ground that this appointment should have been given to a Southerner, and that Judge Woods's nomination, though credited to Georgia, was really an additional and excessive appointment to the Supreme Bench from Ohio, of which State he is a native. It was also contended that Judge Woods is an extreme partisan, and that his appointment is objectionable on that ground. On the other hand, it was argued that he has been a citizen and actual resident of Alabama and Georgia throughout the past 15 years; that his performance of his duties as Circuit Judge for the Southern Circuit has been eminently satisfactory to the Bar and the people of the States therein embraced, and that memorials have been received from the Bar associations of the principal Southern cities strongly urging his confirmation for the Supreme Court. Attention was also directed to the fact that Chief-Justice Waite and Justice Swayne, although appointed from Ohio, are natives, respectively, of Connecticut and Virginia. At the close of the debate a vote was taken on the question of confirmation, and there were only eight votes recorded against it. A motion to reconsider the confirmation was entered, however, and when, after some further discussion, an attempt was made to end the matter by bringing this motion to a final vote, a call for the yeas and nays disclosed the absence of a quorum, and the Senate therefore adjourned at 6 o'clock, leaving the case suspended on the motion to reconsider.

NOTES FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21, 1880.

Mr. Beck introduced to-day in the Senate a bill to repeal all laws which impose taxes on the capital of, and deposits with, banks and bankers, and also repealing the law requiring the use of stamps on bank checks. The bill proposes to repeal so much of section 3,406 of the revised statutes as imposes a tax of 1-24 of 1 per cent. per month on the capital and deposits of any person, bank, or association engaged in the banking business. It also repeals section 3,418 of the Revised Statutes, relative to stamps on bank checks and provides that after the passage of the bill no stamp shall be necessary upon any check such as is named in the section repealed.

The committee appointed to report on the general plan of inaugural decorations have concluded their work, and recommended a series of 38 light arches of gas pipes over Pennsylvania-avenue, with appropriate decorations, representing each State in the Union, and the decoration of all the statues in the city. It is proposed, among other decorations for the Executive Mansion, to have about 100 lanterns of different sizes and 100 dozen hotel candles. The citizens will also be requested to illuminate their dwelling, places of business, &c.

The Commissioner of Pensions, in a letter to the Secretary of the Interior, which was transmitted to the Senate to-day, sets forth the necessity for additional appropriations for the current fiscal year for the Army and Navy pension fund. Commissioner Bentley states that of the $81,475,000 appropriated for Army pensions for the current fiscal year, nearly $56,000,000 had been drawn from the Treasury and paid to pensioners up to Dec. 1, and of the $575,000 appropriated for Navy pensions $570,000 had been drawn up to the same date. He estimates that additional appropriations for the pensions of the current year will be required as follows: For Army invalids, &c., $17,694,031; Navy invalids, $360,274; further appropriations for fees of examining surgeons, $30,000, making the total additional appropriation called for, $18,282,305.

A CRIME TERRIBLY PUNISHED.

A FAMILY ROBBED AND BURNED—ONE OF THE MURDERERS BURNED BY HIS CAPTORS.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Dec. 21.—A special from Tupelo, Miss., a station on the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, gives the following account of a most horrible crime committed in the northern portion of Monroe County, Miss., last Saturday night. The details are as follows: Mr. Brown Riding, whose family consisted of his wife and a daughter 2 years old, on Saturday night permitted two men, giving the name of Miller, to stay all night at his house. They occupied a bed in the same room with the family, it being the only one in which there was a fireplace. About 11 o'clock flames from the little cottage attracted the neighbors, who found the house in flames for discovery of anything to come to save it. It was thought the family had gone away for the night, but the charred bodies of the three members were found in the debris. An investigation developed the above facts, and search was at once made for the two men. It was found they had separated, one going toward Aberdeen and the other in the direction of Tupelo. The posse that went toward Aberdeen was successful in finding a man bid in a field, six miles from that place. He was returned to the scene, where he told the following story: "We needed money. We were permitted to remain over night, and we lay awake after retiring until the heavy breathing of the family satisfied us of their slumbers, when we arose, chloroformed them, rifled the house of valuables, consisting of $27, a watch, a suit of clothes, and a pair of boots. Then we scattered cotton saturated with coal-oil over the floor and on the bed, and set fire to it and left."

The crowd was composed of 25 resolute men, who determined that the villains should be punished with his own weapon, they pinioned him, arranged pine splinters around him, and, having dispensed with the use of chloroform, set them afire. Diligent search is being made for the other man, who will doubtless share the same fate if caught.

TROUBLE IN THE GRAIN TRADE.

ALMOST A PANIC IN CHICAGO—A SUSPENSION IN ST. LOUIS.

CHICAGO, Dec. 21.—Prices on 'Change took another downward whirl to-day, wheat declining nearly 2 cents, corn 1 cent, oats ¼ cent, rye ¼ cent, barley 3 cents, pork 15 to 20 cents, and lard 5 to 10 cents. This heavy and determined break coming on top of yesterday's decline and the steady fall of the past two weeks caused much nervousness, and at times the feeling was quite panicky. There were scores of rumors afloat affecting the standing of some of the smaller commission firms, but most of them were without foundation. As far as is known at present, the only firms which have suspended are Gardner, Dickinson & Co. and J. S. Tyler. Their statements cannot be obtained, but friends say they will settle up in full or part and continue business. The liabilities are probably small in both cases. Mr. Gardner, who is an ex-Governor of Massachusetts, was very reticent in giving information regarding the standing of the firm. He said he supposed the liabilities were in the neighborhood of $100,000; that the largest debtors to the firm were in the East, especially in Boston, and it was in consequence of their failing to respond to calls for more money that the firm was compelled to suspend. In speculating, both Mr. Gardner and the firm were long on the market.

St. Louis, Dec. 21.—It is reported on 'Change this noon that the commission house of Nanson, Barthalow & Co. has failed. The firm is one of the oldest, and held a prominent position both as a receiving and as a speculative firm, handling very large amounts of consigned grain, and trading heavily in futures for customers. For some time past they have been long for their customers, and have also held a large amount of cash grain in store. The late decline in wheat is the immediate cause of their suspension. Their customers not responding to calls for margins, they held on to the contracts themselves until the amount became so great that they concluded to suspend. The amount involved, as nearly as can be ascertained now, is about $50,000. Mr. Barthalow says there is no doubt of the firm being able to pay every dollar it owes. His own property is known to be unincumbered, and the firm's property is in the same condition, and is more than ample to meet all liabilities. Very generous offers of assistance were made by friends, but the firm considered it best to suspend. The effect upon the wheat market was very demoralizing, and large amounts were thrown on the market at a heavy decline. Cash wheat fell about 3 cents and futures about 2 cents, but before the close there was a reaction and a partial recovery, some deals being made at nearly the opening prices.

THE HARWOOD SUSPENSION.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Dec. 21.—The Harwood sale, which was to have taken place to-day, has been postponed until Jan. 3, as anticipated, in the District Court here. There have recently been entered suits of greater or less degree in garnishee and other processes, but it is only fair to presume that all such will be adjusted without serious delay. In the United States Circuit Court at St. Paul the case of Kings and others against N. B. Harwood & Co. still hangs fire. Several days ago a motion was filed to dismiss, and it was announced that the motion was granted. This was incorrect. The motion was heard by Judges McCrary and Nelson to-day, and was denied, and an order was made which requires Harwood to make disclosure to the Referee appointed in the case as to the disposition of his property. Judge Nelson delivered the opinion of the court orally.

A MURDERER'S WEDDING.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Dec. 21.—George W. Petway, charged with the murder of James Farris, a member of Coup's circus, was married this afternoon here to Miss Jeanna Bibo, a lady of education, refinement, and wealth. Petway was recently released on bail from jail, where he had been confined since last Summer for the murder of Farris. He will be tried at the next term of the Criminal Court, and, from the evidence adduced at the last term of the court, he will, in all probability, be adjudged guilty.

PLANS OF CORNELL UNIVERSITY.

ITHACA, N. Y., Dec. 21.—The Trustees of Cornell University, at a recent meeting, appropriated $100,000 to increase the facilities for instruction, as follows: For the building and equipment of a physical department, $50,000; for the building and equipments of veterinary and anatomical departments, $10,000; for a greenhouse and other equipment for a botanical department, $10,000; for the library, $30,000; for the civil engineering and other departments, $10,000. J. Burkett Webb, who is now in Europe, was appointed Professor of Applied Mathematics and Theoretical Mechanics.

THE INTERNATIONAL BILLIARD-MATCH.

PARIS, Dec. 21.—The Vignaux-Slosson billiard-match was resumed this evening. Vignaux replaced the balls where they were at the close of the play yesterday, and made a run of 58. Slosson, catching up the points lost yesterday, reached 1,200, leaving Vignaux with 1,050. The match was then adjourned until to-morrow night.

MARIE ROZE IN INDIANAPOLIS.

INDIANAPOLIS, Dec. 21.—Mme. Marie Röze appeared here to-night in "Aida," in the presence of a crowded house. She was accorded an enthusiastic reception, and she was warmly applauded throughout the opera. Mme. Röze leaves for Louisville to-morrow.

AFFAIRS IN FOREIGN LANDS

THE DESPERATE POLICY OF THE LAND LEAGUE.

LAWLESSNESS STILL ON THE INCREASE—A TENANT FARMER MURDERED—MORE TROOPS ORDERED TO IRELAND.

LONDON, Dec. 21.—An enthusiastic demonstration by Orangemen and Protestant farmers took place yesterday at Coleraim, County Londonderry, at which resolutions were passed energetically denouncing the Land Leage agitation and the inaction of the Government relative to affairs in Ireland.

A tenant farmer named Mullen, while returning from the Ballinrobe Market last night, was fired upon by six men concealed behind a wall on the road to Hollymount. He died immediately, all the bullets taking effect. It is thought that the murder originated in a land dispute. The wife of the murdered man has been arrested.

The London correspondent of a Leeds paper says: "The Government intend to move in Parliament for a select committee to inquire into the organization and working of the Irish constabulary."

The Marquis of Lansdowne, one of the heaviest Irish land owners, has abandoned his intention of spending the Winter in Ireland in consequence of the condition of the country.

At the meeting of the Land League at Dublin the contributions of Mr. Bence-Jones to the English press were denounced as slanders. Mr. Davitt stated that if the Government prohibited all League meetings, the Executive would summon its branches to meet every fortnight, and as that would mean 400 meetings every second week, it would be interesting to calculate how many troops would be required to suppress those gatherings.

A dispatch from Dublin says whether the murder of Mullen was an agrarian outrage or not, it illustrates the state of the country of which advantage may be taken to further the ends of private malice.

DUBLIN, Dec. 21.—The Gazette declares that County Limerick is in a disturbed state, requiring additional Police. The murder of Mullen was not an agrarian affair, but was merely owing to a quarrel between Mullen and his wife.

Subpœnas for witnesses have been issued on both sides in the case of the traversers.

The Scots Guards arrived to-day. There was no demonstration.

At the weekly meeting of the Land League, Mr. Davitt stated distinctly that they did not wish any one to join the League except at their own free will.

CORK, Dec. 21.—Judge Fitzgerald, closing the assizes to-day, said lawlessness had not diminished since the assizes began. He had received four threatening letters during the assizes.

LONDON, Dec. 22.—A battalion of foot has been ordered to get ready to proceed to Ireland from Aldershot.

THE GREEK ARBITRATION SCHEME.

SERIOUS DISCUSSION OF THE MATTER—HOW THE PLAN CAME TO BE PROPOSED.

VIENNA, Dec. 21.—The Government has received a communication from the French Government proposing arbitration of the Greek frontier question.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 21.—The Agence Russe says it doubts the feasibility of arbitration in view of the firm resolution of Greece to insist on the execution of the decision of Europe.

LONDON, Dec. 21.—A correspondent at Berlin, discussing the article of the North German Gazette yesterday, avowing that Germany has declared her readiness to acquiesce in the proposal for European arbitration of the Greek question, provided the other powers assent thereto, says: "The mind of Germany in the matter is now plain, and there can be little doubt that her resolution is either derived from or shared by Austria."

BERLIN, Dec. 21.—The arbitration scheme will not be submitted to the other powers until Germany and Austria come to a decision. It is reported here that the project was elaborated by Prince Bismarck, Count de St. Vallier, and Prince von Hohenlohe during their recent conference at Friedrichsruhe. It is understood that Germany and Austria, whose joint decision will probably be communicated to France in a few days, have already so far come to an agreement with France that no proposal for ultimate coercion will be entertained.

It is now stated that Count von Hatzfeldt will not assume the position of Prince Bismarck's representative even next Summer, and that Count Limburg Strum will continue to act as representative.

THE ENGLISH TELEPHONE CASE.

THE GOVERNMENT READY TO ESTABLISH TELEPHONIC INTERCOMMUNICATION.

LONDON, Dec. 21.—The General Post Office has issued a notice stating that it is prepared to establish in any town telephonic intercommunication, at the same time holding itself ready to make arrangements for the establishment or continuance of systems of intercommunication introduced by existing private companies.

The Times, in an editorial article on the telephone case—which was decided yesterday against the Edison Company—says: "On all the technical questions at issue in the telephone case, the Government is so obviously right that it is difficult to conceive on what grounds the company intend to rest their appeal. For all practical purposes the controversy may be considered to be decided. Postmaster-General Fawcett may be trusted to use the monopoly with the least possible injury to the public. Still, it may be confidently predicted that if telephonic communication be suffered to fall under the control of the General Post Office it will not only be enhanced in cost, but will languish as a scientific discovery. The decisions of the courts on the subject should be submitted to the revision of Parliament. It might be the better policy at once to write off the purchase of telegraphs at a loss rather than to increase the cost of communication by seeking to include the telephone in the bargain."

RUSSIA'S INTERNAL AFFAIRS.

A NEW PLOT TO KILL THE CZAR—THE PROPOSED CHANGES IN THE GOVERNMENT.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 21.—The Herald states that before the Czar left Livadia the Police found a newly dug tunnel running from a barn near the railway. The owner of the barn, who has a son exiled in Siberia, shot himself on the discovery being made.

MOSCOW, Dec. 21.—The University authorities have resolved, in consequence of the agitation among the students, and in view of the approach of the holidays, to suspend all lectures.

LONDON, Dec. 21.—A correspondent at St. Petersburg says: "As far as I can learn, the rumors of the proposed creation of a Supreme Council to settle all questions except those of peace and war, and the proposed Regency, have not at present the least foundation. A change in the Presidency of the existing Council of State is fully expected, either at the beginning of the new year or possibly within six months, at the desire of the Czarewitch."

TRANSVAAL AND NATAL WARS.

A SERIOUS STATE OF AFFAIRS—THE BRITISH FORCES NOW IN SOUTH AFRICA.

LONDON, Dec. 21.—The Times, in a leading editorial article this morning, says: "Besides the dragging war in Basuto-land, in which the Colonial Government may have, at any moment, to confess itself unequal, we are now confronted with the danger of organized disaffection among the Boers. It is probable, however, that the appearance of British troops at Heidelberg will be followed by the dispersion of the Boers to their homes. The present garrison in the Transvaal is composed of two regiments of foot and a battalion of rifles. At Natal there is a fine, trustworthy force of Natal mounted rifles. There are two troops of dragoons also at Natal. The Transvaal and Natal have also forces of artillery. We understand that Sir George Pomeroy Colley is advancing into the Transvaal with a force of artillery and infantry from Natal. We believe there is no reason to doubt that the Government of the Transvaal is provided with a sufficient force to encounter opposition. The Cape Government has not yet made any application for Imperial troops."

LONDON, Dec. 22.—A dispatch from Durban reports that the Boers have stopped the down mails at Heidelberg and opened official letters. The whole Boer Army is near Heidelberg. An action is reported to have occurred at Potchefstroom, but no particulars have been received. British troops have arrived at Standerton.

CURRENT FOREIGN TOPICS.

PARIS, Dec. 21.—M. Mir (Republican) intends to question the Government in the Chamber of Deputies in regard to the commercial relations between France and Canada. He desires the Dominion to be invited to benefit under the provisions of the Anglo-French treaty of commerce.

ROME, Dec. 21.—At to-day's sitting of the Chamber of Deputies, Signor Zanardelli presented the committee's report upon the Electoral Reform bill. The discussion on the bill will, therefore, begin after the Christmas recess. It proposes to establish à scrutin de liste, and to confer the franchise upon all who have undergone a primary education, or who know how to read and write, and who pay taxes to the amount of 20 lire yearly. This would increase the number of voters by 1,400,000.

LONDON, Dec. 21.—Lord Penzance to-day passed sentence of deprivation against the Rev. Mr. De La Bere, Vicar of Pestbury—who has contemptuously disobeyed the previous order of the Court of Arches—suspending him for six months for ritualistic practices.

The Government are expecting to receive the request of the Marquis of Ripon, Governor-General of India, to be relieved from office, as he fears his inability to shake off the Indian fever, of which he has been ill, without returning to Europe.

A Constantinople dispatch to Reuter's Telegram Company says: "According to intelligence from Roumelia, Aleko Pasha, the Governor-General, insists on the number of foreign officers in the Roumelian service being reduced by one-fifth. A project is being drawn up for reducing the Militia force by one-half, the people's sympathies with Russia and the tendency for a union with Bulgaria becoming less pronounced."

Mrs. Susan Willis Fletcher, accused of defrauding Juliet L. Davies of valuables by means of pretended Spiritual communications, was again before the Bow-Street Police Court to-day. The hearing of the case was again adjourned, and Mrs. Fletcher was admitted to bail. During the proceedings Mr. St. John Woltner, Solicitor of the Treasury, stated that the Treasury proposed to proceed against the accused on the charge of conspiracy, and that warrants for conspiracy were out against John William Fletcher, the defendant's husband, and Col. Morton, one of the principal witnesses for the defense.

THE BUFFALO COLLECTORSHIP.

BUFFALO, Dec. 21—Republican politicians here were thrown into a state of much excitement to-day by the intelligence of the nomination of Rodney W. Daniels to succeed Major John Tyler as Collector of this port. It is most decidedly an anti-machine appointment. It confirmed it simply restores Mr. Daniels to the position from which he was removed by President Grant previous to his retirement. There had been two candidates besides Mr. Daniels in the field. Deputy Postmaster Charles A. Gould was backed by the commercial and Conkling interests. Major Tyler's reappointment was desired by James N. Matthews, of the Express. While neither of these candidates had reason to expect the appointment at the hands of President Hayes, they had not, however, seriously contemplated the possibility of his asserting himself, and generally believed that the appointment would be allowed to drift over to the incoming Administration. Mr. Daniels's appointment caused them no little chagrin. Their Republican opponents do not hesitate to exhibit exultation. They feel sanguine that this first card in the new deal is one that will strengthen the chances of the Hon. Sherman S. Rogers for the Senatorship. Mr. Daniels feels confident that his nomination will be confirmed by the Senate, and that Gen. Garfield will not disturb him, at least not until his term of office expires.

MATERIAL FOR A DEMOCRATIC LIE.

ST. ALBANS, Vt., Dec. 21.—A stranger arrived here a few days ago, and registered at the American House as A. P. Hinman, of New-York. Since then he has been very busy in the adjoining town of Fairfield, ostensibly collecting materials for a biography of Vice-President-elect Arthur. He has privately stated to leading Democratic citizens, however, that he is employed by the Democratic National Committee to obtain evidence to show that Gen. Arthur is an unnaturalized foreigner. He claims to have discovered that Gen. Arthur was born in Canada, instead of Fairfield; that his name is Chester Allen instead of Chester Abell; that he was 50 years old in July instead of October, as has been stated, and generally that he is an alien and ineligible to the office of Vice-President.

THE PENNSYLVANIA SENATORSHIP.

PITTSBURG, Penn., Dec. 21.—A caucus of the Republican members of the Legislature from Allegheny County to-night unanimously determined to present the name of Harry W. Oliver for United States Senator.

DISASTERS TO VESSELS.

LONDON, Dec. 21.—Eight of the crew of the British bark Nile, Capt. Dixon, from Quebec for Cardiff, which capsized at sea Nov. 22, were drowned, including the master and second mate, and two of the men died after they were rescued.

The British bark Goshawk, from Dundee, bound to New-Orleans, is ashore at Lowland Point. The crew has been rescued. Part of the cabin furniture has been thrown up.

The British brig Lady Milton, Capt. McRae, at Queenstown, from Charlottetown Nov. 16, had her decks swept by the sea and lost bulwarks. Her cargo is damaged.

The British brig Isabel, Capt. McLeod, (probably from Charlottetown,) lost jib-boom and boats, and is leaky. Her cargo is damaged.

The American bark Azorean, Capt. Davis, from New-Bedford Nov. 22, for Fayal, was driven ashore and wrecked at Fayal on Dec. 11, having been dismasted. All except one of the crew were saved.

The Norwegian bark Charles Bal, Capt. Stein, from New-York for Queenstown, before reported ashore at Emsham, has floated.

BOSTON, Dec. 21.—Capt. Richard Murphy, of the schooner D. J. Adams, now at Commercial Wharf, reports that 16 miles east-south-east of Chatham he was boarded by the Captain of the bark Fearless, of St. John, Newfoundland, 40 days from Brattle Harbor, Labrador, bound to New-York City, with two sets of sails gone, her bulwarks stove, her foretop gallantmast gone, and leaking badly. The crew had been living on salt herring for eight days. Capt. Murphy furnished eight days' stock of provisions and parted company.

FILLING THE ICE-HOUSES.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Dec. 21.—The ice harvest is in progress at all points on the Hudson north of Catskill, and the ice being housed is 10 inches thick and of excellent quality. The houses are about one-third full. The harvest this side of Catskill will commence next week, and it is expected nearly 400,000 tons will be housed by the middle of January.

THE RECORD OF ACCIDENTS.

NEW-ORLEANS, Dec. 23.—John Leary, a watchman on a wharf, built a charcoal fire in his cabin, and was overcome by the fumes and fell asleep. His cabin caught fire and he was burned to death.

TAUNTON, Dec. 21.—Peter Clagston, a brakeman on the Pennsylvania Railroad, was thrown from a freight train near the Clinton-street depot this morning by being struck by a "tell-tale," or signal, to warn brakesmen and others of the proximity of bridges, and had one of his legs broken near the ankle.

NEWBURG, N. Y., Dec. 21.—An unknown man, about 45 years of age, was struck by the cars on the New-York, Lake Erie, and Western Railroad near this city on Monday afternoon. His skull was fractured, and he died within a few hours.

BOONTON, N. Y., Dec. 21.—Capt. John H. Fields, of Saugerties, was caught by his clothing on a revolving shaft in his saw mill this afternoon, and was almost instantly killed. The bones protruded from his clothing.

CRIME AND ITS RESULTS.

OFFENSES REPORTED YESTERDAY—PROCEEDINGS IN CRIMINAL CASES.

UTICA, N. Y., Dec. 21.—Jesse Smith was arrested at Oneida this morning, on the charge of poisoning Hiram Vedder, a hotel-keeper of North Bay, Oneida County, with whom she has been living as his wife for some time. Vedder died suddenly Thursday night. On the following day proceedings to test his sanity were to begin. Whether his death was the result of suicide or the criminal administration of poison has been debated by the community and the officers of the law, but District Attorney Barnett has now found sufficient grounds for the woman's arrest.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 21.—A special from Fort Smith, Ark., reports the murder, last Saturday, of Dr. W. L. Cothey, of Alma, Ark., by a laborer named Bland, in a cotton-field. The murderer has not been arrested.

MILFORD, Penn., Dec. 21.—Thomas Burns, Sr., 68 years old, who, a few days ago, was arrested, charged with shooting and killing, on Nov. 19, his son Thomas, 22 years old, at Pappack, Pike County, was indicted by the Grand Jury here this afternoon. His trial will take place at the February session of the Pike County court.

KINGSTON, Ontario, Dec. 21.—Mrs. Archer Paul Davis, who, with her husband, the notorious abortionist, was condemned to death in Toronto several years ago for the murder Jeannie Gilmour, but whose sentences were commuted to imprisonment for life, has been pardoned and set at liberty.

NEWBURG, N. Y., Dec. 21.—Burglars broke into the depot of the New-York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad at Chester last night. They tore a side from the office and removed the safe to a neighboring field, where they forced it open and secured $35. The thieves escaped.

BOSTON, Dec. 21.—The case of T. Henry Perkins, the broker who was arrested yesterday, charged with unlawfully disposing of securities, was called up in the Municipal Court to-day. An investigation seemed to show no fraud in the case, which was continued until Tuesday next, bail being reduced from $35,000 to $1,000.

ST. THOMAS, Ontario, Dec. 21.—William Whale was arrested here to-day on suspicion of being concerned in the recent robbery of the Treasury of Rupelemie township, when $2,000 were stolen.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Dec. 21.—A private letter from Hawesville gives the particulars of a tragedy which occurred there on Saturday. Charles McAdams shot and instantly killed Philip Rial at the house of C. J. Sterritt, editor of the Plain Dealer. Rial commenced the affray by firing at McAdams with a pistol, when the latter replied with a shot-gun, with instantaneous fatal result. Both men were young, well known, and highly connected, and the excitement over the affair ran at fever heat. McAdams's brother married Rial's sister, and it is said some remarks by McAdams about Rial's sister caused the resentment of Rial, and a fatal encounter was the result.

GENERAL RAILWAY NOTES.

WORK IN THE SOUTH-WEST—READING ROAD MATTERS—A SAN DOMINGO LINE.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 21.—A special dispatch to the Republican from Dallas, Texas, says: "Gen. G. M. Dodge, President of the Texas and Pacific Railroad, and Chief Engineer Washburn passed through here to Shreveport to-night. Operations will be immediately commenced on the New-Orleans and Pacific Road. All the grading is done except about 75 miles, and the track laying from both ends will begin by Jan. 1. Gen. Dodge also says the south-east extension of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Road from Greenville to Minola is now in course of location. The track laying will begin within 30 days, and trains be run to Minola by May 1, 1881, at latest. The track on the Texas Pacific extension is going down at the rate of a mile per day, and has almost reached the Taylor County line. The grade is now completed 300 miles west of Fort Worth."

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 21.—The Receivers of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, at their meeting this afternoon, took up the complaint of holders of improvement bonds of the Schuylkill Navigation Company, the interest on which they have announced would be paid at 5 per cent. inst

he took his seat, with cries of "Good! good!" and "three cheers for President Hayes of Ohio," which were proposed by a member of the society. The Chairman again rapped for order, and said it gave him pleasure to announce the next toast, in honor of another distinguished citizen, whose name was familiar and honored throughout the world, and whose pre-eminent services had endeared him to his countrymen, "The Health of Gen. Grant." The toast was received with great enthusiasm, and was drunk standing. Gen. Grant then said:

THE ADDRESS OF GEN. GRANT.

MR. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN OF THE NEW-ENGLAND SOCIETY: I am afraid that you are doomed to disappointment; I am afraid that you will not be disappointed with me, and that is that I will not detain you long. We have heard from your President, and also from the President of the United States some eulogies of the facts of the Pilgrims and the people of New-England. I subscribe to all that has been said by them. [Applause.] I have heard a great deal in our country in the last 15 years about carpet-baggers and the term "carpet-bagger" has become almost a word of reproach. The New-Englander believes that when he is a citizen of any State he has as a citizen of the United States and he has but to go to any portion of the country to be a citizen there, with all the rights he had at the place of starting. [Applause.] In our Northern States, and particularly in the North-western States, we have felt the effects of the carpet-bagger—the best effects of the carpet-bagger being that he is received as the full equal of the native-born citizen. [Applause.] I have seen the elegant cities that have sprung up within the life-time of the youngest in this audience, and I have seen prosperity spread over the prairie where a few years before nothing stood, and would not have been, without carpet-bagger, until there was plenty everywhere, and it has been the work of the carpet-bagger and the principles of the people who form society that have done it. [Applause.] Without any reflection upon any section of the country, I would say that in my judgment there would have been very much greater prosperity in some portions of it—broader greater contentment—if the carpet-bagger had been received in the same way he was received in the North-west. [Applause.]

In fact, I have almost come to the conclusion that there is but very little progress or advancement in any community made up entirely of the natives of that community. It requires a little stirring up and a going away, a going from the place of one's nativity to bring out his best energies. You may take it in this City if you wish; you may take it in the suburbs, just across the East River, [shouts of laughter and applause,] wherever you like, in fact, and while you may find very excellent representatives and very estimable men, who conduct and continue their business very faithfully and honestly, you will rarely find anything new in the way of enterprise that is not started by some man who has come among you. So that I am decidedly in favor of the principles of New-England—go where you please, obey the laws wherever you go, respect the rights of others, believe in yourselves, believe others to be free and enjoy their own political and religious views, making no distinctions on account of nativity. [Applause.] Your President asked one conundrum here when he said, "Where was the Pilgrim Father when he was and where didn't he go?" That conundrum I shall not attempt to answer. [Applause and laughter.] My travels have been entirely in the Northern hemisphere—I have never been below the equator, though I have been pretty near to it—but wherever I have been I have never found a place that a New-Englander hadn't visited before me. [Laughter.] If your President wants a solution of this question I suppose he can get it from Stanley; [laughter;] he is the only man perhaps who can answer it. [Renewed laughter.] Gentlemen, I will now take my seat, assuring you that I am much obliged to you for the kindness you have shown me. [Applause.]

MR. BEECHER'S REMARKS.

President Stillman next called on the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher to respond to the toast of "Our Pilgrim Fathers." As he rose, he was greeted and hailed for three cheers for the Pastor of Plymouth Church, and they were given with a will. "Gentlemen," said the speaker, "the theme which I am called on to treat is a great deal larger than you have the time to hear it unfolded. The development of our Pilgrim Fathers, and the work which they accomplished in the regeneration of the new world, cannot be disjointed without some reference to the development of the human race in itself. They were not shot up by any volcanic action, a time of silver between two rocks of iron. Their coming was one of those marks in the period of a great transition. The world had been slumbering—swooning is perhaps the better word—for hundreds of years in ignorance and superstition. There came at length a grand revival movement, and the development of the principles of the Pilgrim Fathers was due. In the north of Europe this movement took on the form of the old Teutonic type, and went forward in the direction of a larger and nobler manhood. They builded on the inside of man, not on the outside. The cement of the outside, they knew, was an utter contempt for the low state to which humanity had fallen. The one radical idea was that man was not large enough. Every attempt of the Puritans to enlarge humanity was hindered by the Church, hindered by the Government, hindered by prejudice and by ignorance. Every attempt was met by buffets, and often by bitter persecution, in which the life-blood of the advocates of liberty of conscience was spilled, but still they persevered bravely in their noble purpose. Their efforts differed very materially from those other attempts which were made to accomplish the same end at the same time. Many men sought after goodness by isolating themselves from their kind and dwelling in caves, alone, while women retired from the world into convents. They took the direction that a man who lives alone with himself has the devil always for a bedfellow. [Laughter and applause.] The Puritans mingled with their fellow-men and strove to raise humanity with them. If they were saved, they meant to carry somebody else along with them.

"World was very much unknown at the time of which we speak. The heavens above and the earth beneath were full of devils and witches. The supernatural surrounded everything, and all was under the priestly or the royal hand. The Puritans had to break through all this darkness and relay the foundations of a character, not for themselves alone, but for their fellow-men. It is true that they often said harsh and unkind things of their enemies, but they were not pugnacious. They never raised a fight, but when it was once entered they never left it until they had it the way they wanted it. I admit that they sometimes smashed statues, but at in those times was identified almost wholly with idolatry, and while we, now, in a more enlightened age, may think that they went beyond the right, their lesser light believed that they were doing their duty to God and to men. They acted from the purest and highest of motives. The statues were the centres of superstition and ignorance, and to get rid of them the Puritans had to destroy idolatry. The whole air had been changed by the Church of Rome. Everything was stamped with the impress of this cross, not as we understand it to-day, but as the symbol of superstition. In the times of the Pilgrim Fathers, it too, would have refused to dance. [Laughter.] I would not have worshiped in churches with painted windows, and I would have hammered the statues as they did. [Applause.] They had a perfect right to hit anything in their way in their effort to escape from the bondage of ignorance and superstition.

"When the Puritans came to New-England," Mr. Beecher said, "they brought themselves with themselves. They came here to become larger men, and they accomplished their purpose. They made some mistakes, from the bitterness of the persecutions which they had suffered, and fearing an enemy in every bush, were pretty sure to do. They hung a few witches New-England, and had the last shower of what in Europe had been a deluge. They had seen hundreds of thousands of witches sacrificed in the old country, and they could not once rid themselves of the idea that the witches were the devil's own children. It is not strange that they hung a few of them in the New World. The great mistake about hanging is the want of proper selection. [Laughter.] God seems to have picked out the barren territory on the globe for the Puritans to inhabit. He placed them on the sterile soil of New-England, and told them to show what they could do, and they have shown it to the world. [Applause.] They improved upon the soil, as well as—God and they transformed sterile, sandy, rocky New-England into a blooming garden. Now it is full of all beauty, of all fruitfulness, of all joy, and of all sweetness. Every good thing, the Puritans left behind, and those who did not believe in human greatness and equality in the garden spot of this fair land—the South. The works of the anti-Puritans of the South and the Puritans of New-England speak for themselves and need no comment. New-England is a small territory, but it is a very populous State. The people of New-England have the larger life family, and when they spread over the world they carry New-England ideas with them everywhere. Wherever you find good schools, banks well conducted, or railroads paying dividends, there you will find Yankees and if the management of the enterprises are not Yankees, you may be sure that their wives are. The best thing that can be said of the Pilgrim Fathers, after all, is to point to their posterity. What kind of men must they have been to be the fathers of such fellows as we are? The Puritans have controlled the world more than Rome or Greece ever did, and the best inscription for a monument to our Pilgrim Fathers would be that used as an epitaph for Sir Christopher Wren: "If you seek a monument, look around you." If you want to see the monument to the Puritans, behold this continent! That is it."

PRESIDENT PORTER'S RESPONSE.

President Noah Porter, of Yale College, in response to the toast "The Colony: honored by our sons, honored by us," said: "My friend, Mr. Beecher, has so exhausted the subject that I hardly know what to add. I can add nothing to what the President has said. What New-England has been it has twice mainly to its clergy. The Puritan party sprang into being in Emanuel College, in Cambridge. The clergy, from the first, were the prophets and the priests. The New-England clergy believed in the application of Christian truth. They went to New-England in the stress of necessity, and found a free land. Their dreams have, in good measure, come to pass. They believed in the duty of vindicating Christian truth. If I were to tell you what I believe about the country clergy of New-England, I would be in attendance. Had it not been for the country clergymen of New-England there would be no colleges to-day in this country. Wherever the Yankee goes the spirit of the living God goes. The clergy have followed by our fathers, they are honored by us. They ought to be honored by us more than they are."

THE REMARKS OF MR. EVARTS.

In response to the toast, "The Republic and its Outlook," William Evarts made an address nearly half a mile long. "I have been so accustomed," he said, "to hearing the estimate put by New-York people upon Brooklyn people, that it is somewhat new for me to-night to hear the estimate of the Brooklyn people upon the New-Yorkers. If you look at one of the great differences between New-York and Brooklyn, you will see the secret of your vast superiority. New-York has more Irishmen than Yorkers; Brooklyn has more Bostonians than impostors. Our New-England festival in New-York is little in keeping with the poverty and the frugality of New-England. Here I see exactly such a company and such a feast as might have been seen in the first year of the emigration of our ancestors. [Laughter.] We honor our fathers by loud praises; you by self-denying examples. [Laughter.] The Republic has grown from the seed planted in New-England. It has gained, like the oak, from the soil and air, in body, in numbers, in wealth, and by the accession of the population from many shores. But the oak, nevertheless, is an oak, because it sprang from the oak seed. Our pilgrim fathers came, it is said, to occupy this ground, upon which we stand. But Providence took them to New-England, where they might grow. They must have a chance not only to grow, but to move. It was natural enough for them to want to move after landing in sterile New-England. The first letter that I received after I took control of the Department of which I am now the head was a well-written letter from a Western man, who said he had no excuse for asking for a position except "a pardonable desire to live elsewhere." The New-Englander never always have a pardonable desire to live elsewhere. If that had gone to the South, and settled about the mouth of the Mississippi, they would have had no desire to go elsewhere; but then they never would have been the man they were. It has been said that the New-Englander has a meddlesome disposition; that he wants to interfere with the business of his neighbors. But there is nothing in that; he always minds his own business, and minds it with great results. The idea springs from the fact that the New-Englander always considers everybody else's business his own.

The first developments of our forefathers were education, industry, and poverty. As Plymouth Rock is to the United States, so is the United States to the future possession and control of the world. It is not by armies and navies, but by the example of a free people, governed by education, occupied by industry, that we are to disarm the armies of Europe when they dare not disarm themselves. The peasant in Germany or Ireland who carries a soldier on his back cannot compete with the peasant in America who has no soldier on his back. Every name has shown as that faith in God is a match for all our evils. If there was to be a march to the sea, [Sherman,] a surrender of some part of the people to some other part, it was to be in and of Virginia, not in and of New-England. [Cheers.] It is a wonderful spectacle, after the dire calamity of civil war, that in 15 years the Nation is more homogeneous, more honestly, more powerful, richer than it ever could have been but for the triumph of the best over the worst." [Cheers.]

GEN. SHERMAN'S SPEECH.

Gen. Sherman was called upon to respond to the toast of the "Army and Navy." He was enthusiastically received, and spoke for about 10 minutes the drift of his remarks being, that armies are necessary to all nations and will be as long as the world lasts. "While I was in Washington," he said, "I was embarrassed by receiving invitations from two New-England societies to dine with them on different days in commemoration of the same event. Each claims that its day is genuine, and I must leave it to you to settle this controversy. While laboring under this serious doubt, and as soon as I saw that I was booked to make a speech, I argued to myself that perhaps I recommend me if I even tried to bribe him, but he said that he belonged to the noble army who were invisible in war and invisible at dinner, so I shall have to speak for myself and my brethren of the army who have to-night would have to believe that war is abolished, and that hereafter we are to live in eternal peace. God grant that it may be so, but I doubt it. I heard Henry Ward Beecher say the same thing only a few years before one of the greatest wars the world has ever known. Other well-known statesmen said the same thing, but they were mistaken. When this Nation was bolting over and war was ready to spring upon us at any moment, they told us there would be no more wars. There were more, and there will be still more. I still doubt whether mankind can look forward to a state of perpetual peace. I don't believe in this great improvement of mankind. Man is very much the same to-day as he was in the beginning. He has the same passions and feelings, ready to break out at any time, as they can only be curbed, by force. All prudent people ought to keep themselves ready to meet these sudden and dangerous outbreaks when they come. New-England ideas, Mr. Beecher would have us believe, are perfect. So they are—as perfect as the Catechism. [Laughter.] The Yankees have done a great deal toward settling the country, and yet two-thirds of all the country is still unsettled, unsettled in civilization. The Pilgrim fathers, peaceful as they were, began a war—the war of civilization against barbarism; and that war is still waging. It is not yet ended in America. It was a strife to obtain a higher condition of humanity, and the work is not yet done.

"You, here in New-York as comfortable and secure as you could be in London, know nothing of the struggle that is going on. At this moment there are Miles Standishes in this country. You are not much like your forefathers here. I can take you to a place where you live Yankees are. If you are so good why do you employ more policemen in New-York and Brooklyn in proportion to the population than there are soldiers in the Army of the country? You have no Indians, though you have a scalper. You need your capital in the West and built great railroads. You know very well that our little army is guarding these railroads against the Indians; not for the sake of your capital, not for the sake of the railroads, but for the sake of the people who live and do business there. Wherever there is property men will combine to take it, even at the risk of their lives. We are a higher race of people than have ever been produced before. [Laughter.] But there is in human nature a spark of danger that must be reckoned with on occasions. The greatest pages of the history of our country have been written on the battle-field. Is there a New-Englander who would wipe Bunker Hill from his list? Yet it is not much larger than a hill. Who would part with the fame of Harrison or Perry on Lake Erie. Those men on the battle-field opened the West to you Yankees. Was that barbarism? The black man must fight for his freedom well as the white. They must fight for their freedom, if they would keep it. The soldiers will all fight for them, but they must fight, too. He who would be free, himself must strike the blow. There is no fear of this country going backward. The war settled facts that can not become the subject of controversy. The day will come when all nations will be equal. You Yankees don't want to monopolize all the virtues. If you do, you won't get them. The Germans have some virtues, and they are heartily welcome to them. The Yankees have the South American trade. The end is not yet; but no long as man is man there will be a necessity for organized force." [Cheers.]

The remaining toasts on the list and the gentlemen who responded to them were as follows: "Commerce—the Law of our national growth," Alfred A. Low; "Boston," the Rev. E. E. Hale; "The New-England Society in the City of New-York—a worthy representative of New-England principles," Joseph H. Choate; "The Press—Our Defender of Liberty," the Hon. Joshua M. Van Cott; "Education—Indispensable to the safe exercise of Universal Suffrage," President F. A. Chadbourne, of Williams College; "Our Colonial Fathers—the Founders of our City and State: Diverse in nationality, but united in purpose," the Hon. Henry C. Murphy; "The State of New-York," the Hon. Chauncey M. Depew; "Early New-England Literature," the Hon. Stewart L. Woodford. The assembly dispersed after singing "Old Hundred."

SARAH BERNHARDT IN MONTREAL.

MONTREAL, Dec. 21.—A motion was made in the City Council to-day to prevent Sarah Bernhardt from playing here on Christmas Day. The matter was referred to the City Attorney, who says there is a quaint statute not by-law to prevent her from so doing.

BIBBY AGAINST WHISTLER

AN EXCITING WRESTLING MATCH AT THE RINK.

THE TWO ATHLETES CONTEND WITH EACH OTHER FOR NEARLY FIVE HOURS, BUT NEITHER SECURES A FALL.

Edwin Bibby, the English wrestler, and Clarence Whistler, the young Western Hercules who lately wrestled an exciting match which terminated in a drawn battle after a prolonged struggle of several hours, met again last night in the Rink. The match was for stakes of $250 a side, and was contested Graeco-Roman style, the best two in three falls. There was a large assemblage of spectators, who applauded loudly when the contestants made their appearance. Christopher Hoffler was umpire for the Englishman, and James Pilkington, of the Broadway Police squad, looked after the interests of Whistler. "Mr. Childs, of New-York City," was announced as the Referee. The men stripped to the waist, and at 8:40 they rushed at each other and began to dance about in lively style. Whistler were red and white trunks, and Bibby was incased in trunks of white and blue. Suddenly Bibby gave a tiger-like spring at his adversary, and the next instant he was lifted into the air like a feather and thrown on his chest. He sprang to his feet instantly, and futile efforts for an advantageous "lock" were resumed by both men. They pranced about like tigers at play, till Bibby was forced to his knees in eluding a dangerous "lock." Whistler's face wreathed with smiles as the Englishman went to work afresh, being whirled about in unceremonious fashion by the brawny American. A third time Bibby was tossed in the air, and narrowly escaped being sent over on his shoulders. A broad grin illuminated Whistler's countenance after this feat. Twenty minutes later the spectators became frantic, as Whistler caught Bibby under the arms, forced him down, lost his hold, caught it again in an ugly way, and was in the act of lifting him into the air, when the Englishman squirmed out of the predicament like an eel. A minute afterward Bibby was again in danger, and a fifth time escaped. Whenever Bibby tried to get a hold on his adversary there was always a laugh, for Whistler budged no more than a huge rock might.

In breaking another hold Bibby pitched himself clean off the ground. Both men back again instantly. The men had been at work at this time for over an hour, and Bibby was kept on the defensive all the time, and seemed afraid to stand up squarely to his task as Whistler did. Two hours passed without a fall, but whatever advantage there was rested decidedly with the Western wrestler, who easily defeated all the Englishman's attempts to catch him at a disadvantage. There appeared to be but very little evidence that Bibby could ever hope to overcome Whistler's great and superior strength, which showed itself in every movement. To tire him out, a task he undertook at first, seemed equally futile. As 11 o'clock drew near Whistler began to force the battle and gave Bibby no rest, causing him to spring hither and thither about the platform, but never letting him get near enough to close with him. The Englishman kept butting against his adversary's massive chest. Both men's trunks were stained with perspiration and dirt, and their bodies glistened as if oil had been poured over them. The elbows of both contestants filled from the bruises received during their terrific struggle. The time spent on toward midnight, and Whistler began to force the battle in a manner that seemed to grow desperate under the repeated onslaughts of Whistler, who nearly wrenched his head off and twisted his arms until they grew scarlet, and the veins stood out like cords. Bibby bowed under his shoulders. Bibby lost the stocking of his right foot, which was worn out at the toe by friction against the floor. The struggle waxed fiercer, but still Bibby saved himself from being thrown. At 11:30 o'clock the most desperate struggle of all occurred, but by a great feat of contortion Bibby recovered his footing where a fall seemed inevitable. The slipperiness of his skin was all that saved him. A like struggle was repeated a second later, and he barely escaped a fall. Whistler's face at this time shook him like a dog would a rat, but shake as he would, Bibby, cat-like, landed on his feet. The excitement was at fever pitch, and the spectators pressed forward eagerly to watch every movement of the wrestlers.

The moments flew by and the men never relaxed their efforts. Whistler rushed at the Englishman like a bull at times as if to sweep him down by the sheer force of the onslaught, but Bibby turned him off, and the spectators began to think that another drawn bout would be the only result of the conflict of strength. At midnight the men appeared no nearer scoring a fall on either side than at the outset. Just before midnight Bibby again escaped from a vicious hold. The American endeavored to catch him as his body. Not a single time during the entire struggle, however, had he been able to gain any semblance of a hold upon his American adversary. Whistler whirled him about sometimes as if he were a mere figure made of rags, and twice he had nearly succeeded in the efforts of the Englishman to return the treatment.

At 1:30 o'clock this morning the wrestlers ceased their struggles, declaring they would never wrestle together again; they had tried it twice, and were convinced that neither could throw the other.

FOR PROTESTANTISM IN FRANCE.

A MEETING ADDRESSED BY M. REVEILLAUD, DR. STORRS, MR. DODGE, AND OTHERS.

A meeting in aid of the Protestant revival in France, under the auspices of the American and Foreign Christian Union, was held last evening at Association Hall, corner of Twenty-third-street and Fourth-avenue, the Rev. Dr. Richard S. Storrs presiding. There was a large attendance. M. Reveillaud made an appeal in behalf of the evangelical cause in France, speaking in his own language, his remarks being translated as he delivered them by the Rev. G. T. Dodds, of Paris. Seated on the platform were the Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby, the Hon. William E. Dodge, Peter Cooper, Prof. H. M. Baird, the Rev. Mr. Sheshadri, the converted Brahmin, the Rev. Dr. S. I. Prime, the Rev. C. H. Parkhurst, Mr. Samuel Sloan, Prof. Schaff, the Rev. Dr. William M. Taylor, the Rev. Dr. Beard, of Syracuse; Mr. E. R. Monroe, Mr. Emile Oberlier, Mr. Seabury Brewster, Mr. R. C. Morse, Mr. William C. Brewster, Mr. R. R. Moburg, Rev. Dr. Ludlow, and others.

M. Reveillaud narrated the history of the Protestant revival in France. It was not only a religious but a political revolution. France, as Thiers had said, could only take her proper place among the nations after a rollback of the Catholic Church were inimical to the Republic. The people were satisfied of this fact, and were leaving the Church not only in detachments, but in masses. What was needed to help the Protestant revival was money, men, and means. He described the methods adopted by the evangelists. They hired large hall-rooms and public places, advertised by means of placards, and the meetings were largely attended. The great question of the people of France, he said, were Catholics in name, and would be easily converted to Protestantism if a proper effort was made at this time.

The Rev. G. T. Dodds followed in an address in which he substantiated what M. Réveillaud had said, and urged that this was the critical moment for the evangelization of France. The time for opportunity should be seized. The minds of all intelligent Frenchmen were directed to the religious question. There was a great curiosity to read the Bible, and there was a great need of that sacred book. The people were after Christ on the one hand and superstition on the other, by infidelity. He appealed to all to help the good cause.

Dr. Storrs was the next speaker. He pointed to the brilliant history of France, and claimed for it the friendship and sympathy of America as its ally in the Revolution. It was fitting that the statue of Lafayette should be near to that of Washington in one of the public squares of the City. The peasantry of France were fully capable of supporting a republican form of government like our own. What they needed was moral training. The true Gospel should be preached there. France was a country which seized a great idea with enthusiasm. At present the idea of Protestantism was abroad in the country, and it was a grand opportunity for evangelization. The committee headed by Dr. Crosby would take all means for the cause sent to them.

The Hon. William E. Dodge made a brief appeal for subscriptions to the fund, and a basket subscription was taken. The meeting adjourned after the singing of the doxology, and the benediction by M. Réveillaud and the Rev. Mr. Dodds will leave for France by the steamer Labrador to-day.

Estes had his law office in the second story, and all his papers, books, and furniture were saved. It was thought for a while that the whole north side of the public square would be consumed, but the fire walls and snow on the top of the houses prevented the further spread of the flames. The following had goods damaged by removal: John Smith, jeweler; J. Keon, confectioner; Bond & Lee, dentists; R. Anderson, furniture and stoves; J. Levi, grocerie, and Levi & Brothers, dry goods. The fire was caused by the explosion of a coal-oil lamp. The insurance is placed in Memphis companies.

A fire was discovered in the flour and feed store of J. C. Smith & Co., of No. 226 Washington-street, Newark, last night, and it resulted in the total destruction of that building and in badly damaging the adjoining structures, Nos. 224 and 228 Washington and No. 69 Bank streets. The total loss will exceed $8,000. Smith's feed store was on the first floor, and his loss is over $3,000. The second story was occupied by James Cadmus as a carpenter-shop. His loss will be over $1,000. The building, which was of three stories and of brick, was owned by John Snyder, whose loss will reach $4,000. All the losses are fully covered by insurance, mostly in Newark companies.

A fire broke out early yesterday morning in St. Albans, Vt., on the third floor of the Darrow Block, occupied by C. H. Bradley, furniture upholsterer. The hose was not rotted and the roof burned off. NEW PUBLICATIONS

HOLIDAY BOOKS

JEAN FRANÇOIS MILLET, PEASANT AND PAINTER. Translated by HELENA DE KAY from the French of ALFRED SENSIER. Boston: LEE & SHEPARD. & Co. 1881.

Enterprise is one of the few virtues which believers in the old or European order of things have grudgingly allowed to the Americans. Until the civil war was over the few who trusted that the United States, along with its incessant striving after the material, would also evolve a love for the beautiful and a taste for what is not merely the brute luxury of the parvenu, had hard work to maintain their ground in face of the overwhelming arguments which our civilization presented. The volume before us marks the enterprise of American publishers, but it also stands as a significant landmark in the progress of æsthetics on this side of the ocean. An abridged translation from the advance sheets appears at the same time with the French original in Paris, and though it is on a smaller scale and has fewer specimens of the work of the great artist whose life it relates, that fact is all the more significant of the spread here of a love for the arts. The great French edition, with its wide margins, superb reproductions by heliotypic process, its labored initials, and costly printing, is a book for the few who are able to afford such expensive luxuries; the American translation, well bound, finely printed, and illustrated with 23 careful woodcuts of Millet's paintings, is sold for the price obtained by many English books which have no special attractions to make them costly. It presents a careful sifting of the large work by Sensier, and, by reason of its smaller size and price, widens the circle of its readers to a degree which the original, or a complete translation of the original, could never attain. Sensier died in 1877 without finishing this work, and now M. Paul Mantz, taking the manuscript and notes, has completed it in a rather off-hand manner, which shows that he appreciates thoroughly neither Millet nor his biographer. Fortunately, Sensier had already carried the life down to 1864, and the portion attributable to M. Mantz does not affect the result. Sensier also wrote "Souvenirs sur Théodore Rousseau," (1872,) and "Etude sur George Michel," both of which ought to find their way, more or less abridged, into English.

Jean François Millet, whose paintings are now held at enormous prices by the importers of foreign pictures, was not a favorite either here or in France a few years ago. The late William Morris Hunt was one of the first to discover his genius, and through him Mr. Quincy Shaw, of Boston, came to know the value of his work. The house of the latter at Jamaica Plain is said to contain the best collection of Millet's work which exists. The Luxembourg has at most one painting by Millet, and that unimportant. A rich tailor near Paris is reported to be the owner of the collection next in importance to that of Mr. Quincy Shaw. The slow but sure gains which his paintings have made in the affections of amateurs would be enough to make him the most interesting artist which France has produced, but his life in itself is a tableau which places him among the ranks of the most picturesque old painters whom that delightful Florentine gossip, Vasari, has described for all time. A peasant who is fated to be a painter, and goes to Paris when the bourgeoisie is most triumphant and vulgar; a Norman who faces the undying prejudice of the Parisian against that silent, thrifty race; an innovator in art who at the outset criticises, under the mask of the impenetrable silence of a plowman, the greatest painters of the day, and sees the influence of the knight of the palette, the Rococo century, the posturing Bouchers and Watteaus; a student in the atelier of Delaroche who would not paint like him, or anybody else, but was overwhelmed with the beauty of the sculptures in the Louvre, and suffered positive agonies of pleasure in looking at the drawings of Michael Angelo! Such is the figure which Sensier had to deal with during his latter years of failing strength, and at the last to leave without the final touches and to the mercy of an inferior writer.

Sent to Paris on the strength of a slender pension granted by the town of Cherbourg, which was soon withdrawn, Millet had to bear great privations and hardships. At Barbizon he was luckily well-nourished—and still greater hardships of mind. He painted unsigned portraits for $1 and $2 a piece. He made pastels in imitation of Boucher and Watteau, of which the dealers were very disdainful, and for which they would never give more than $4. And well they might be wary, for how could such an uncouth genius hit the shallow prettiness which gave a selling value to these feeble delights of feeble folk? But all the while he was studying what was to be found in libraries and museums of the work of Albrecht Dürer, Leonardo da Vinci, Jean Cousin, and Nicolas Poussin, but especially of Michael Angelo. He read all the biographies, communications, correspondence, and documents concerning the great artist, which he never ceased to consider the highest expression of art. And, indeed, if any one master can be traced in the most original vein which Millet struck out it would be the mighty artist who, next to Dante, forms the greatest boast of Florence.

"In these researches Millet liked to be accompanied by Marolle (an artist, the son of a varnish manufacturer.) Either because he was afraid of learned men or feared to commit some blunder, he made the friend do the talking. Marolle was a link between the outer world and Millet, which strangely filled him with a sort of horror, and this function Marolle performed with zeal. * * * Almost every year he went to breathe his native air and stay some weeks in Gruchy with his mother and grandmother. He made two portraits of his grandmother, (who was also his godmother, and had taken complete charge of his early life.) One was a drawing, life size, characterized by a strong expression of austerity. Millet worked on it with great care as a labor of love. He wanted, he said, to show his soul of his grandmother. As his pictures did not sell, he accepted commissions for signs, and painted them the size of life. Having failed to please the municipality of Cherbourg with the portrait of a Roman hero, (Cincinnatus,) Millet was completely taken off by the influential people, who were afraid of having protected a sign-painter, but such injustice raised friends for him. Millet was a big, handsome fellow, proud, with gentle eyes. A nice Cherbourg girl, whose portrait he was painting, took compassion on him. Millet married her in 1841, and began to paint portraits of his wife, himself, and several members of his new family, whom he always disliked to speak of. His marriage was not happy. His wife was very delicate; she suffered and faded away, dying in Paris in 1844. At this period his talent changed, and assumed a distinct individuality. The bleakness and thick shadows of his figures disappeared, and all the traditions of the Delaroche studio. He painted with fervor, with the joy of a man who feels full of life and gifts, and who understands the secrets of his masters. But his hand is too clever and does not follow his mind. Then he stops, studies Michael Angelo, and analyzes Correggio. He goes to the Louvre, does not copy, but lives in the atmosphere of the masters. His questions them, tries to understand them. 'At last,' said Diaz, 'here is a new man who has the knowledge which I would like to have, and movement, color, expression, too—here is a painter!' Millet's life now became still harder, complicated by the sufferings of a dying woman. He was without money, position, or connexions. He never spoke of this time without a sort of terror. His material life was a daily fight. He was ready to do anything that chance offered; had endless difficulties to get the most trifling sums paid. He met people who took advantage of his poverty. Who wanted him with their rebuffs and went to all lengths in their cruelty. A different man would have vowed vengeance on this inhuman society—this savage Paris; but Millet did not bear any malice. He merely told the fact and added: 'Yes, there are bad people, but there are good ones also, and one good one consoles you for many bad. I sometimes found helping hands, and I don't complain.'"

In 1845 he married a second time, and for a little while seemed to be actually a popular painter. At Havre he painted all sorts of people and things; a public exhibition was organized, and when with difficulty he had got together 200f. he left for Paris with his young wife. "Here ends the happy life of Millet. Paris, austere and stubborn, will dispute and fight him. Becoming soon a father, his duty will be to his family; black bread and anxiety will be his portion—he will never see again either his mother or grandmother. Paris will be a prison to him, and will not even let him go to bid farewell to his old nurses. He will write often to the inhabitants of his native town; the answers will be always touchingly full of tenderness and resignation; but he will always look upon himself as a captive. 'I felt,' said Millet, 'that I was nailed to a rock and condemned to endless labor; but I could have forgotten all if I had only been able once in a while to see again my native place.'"

—The Decorative Catalogue of Books. Published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co.—Illustrations by Mary Hallock Foote to "The Hanging of the Crane" and "Mabel Martin" by Longfellow to "Miles Standish," by Gibson, Merrill Shepard, and others, to various portions of the great subscription edition of Longfellow's works ornament the neatly printed octavo.

—Five Mice in a Mouse-trap. By the Man in the Moon. Done in the Vernacular from the Lunacular. By Laura E. Richards. Boston: Estes & Lauriat.—A lively account of the adventures of, and stories told to, five little girls. It is by a daughter of Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, who has already found great favor in the nursery with "Babyhood" and other juvenile books. The illustrations and the bright pictures on the cover are unusually good, being supplied by Kate Greenaway, Addie Ledyard, and others. It has a brightness and piquancy entirely its own.

—Zigzag Journeys in Classic Lands; or, Tommy Toby's Trip to Mount Parnassus. By Hezekiah Butterworth. Boston: Estes & Lauriat.—On the strength of the success of "Zigzag Journeys in Europe," we are threatened with a full-blown Zigzag series, so much virtue does the publisher discover in a name that is already known. The present is much the same in plan as the book of last Winter, except that the young tourists pass through the old Roman Empire and cross the Mediterranean and Ægean. Its object is by affording a glimpse of the past glory and a view of the present condition of Greece and Rome to arouse an interest in classical studies. A variegated chromo cover, abundant illustrations in the text and full page, and the frequent use of anecdotes and dialogue are features of the plan. "Zigzag Journeys in the Orient" is the next volume projected.

—American Painters, with One Hundred and Four Examples of their Work Engraved on Wood. By G. W. Sheldon. Enlarged Edition. New-York: D. Appleton & Co.—This exceedingly handsome volume is representative of contemporaneous American art, containing numerous engravings, taken after the best works of our painters. In the text many of the artists have written their lives, which must make these autobiographies of special interest. Commencing with Mr. F. E. Church, the catalogue ends with a work of Mr. William Page. In point of typography and binding the volume is perfection itself. The illustrations are the work of such excellent wood-engravers as Linton, Morse, Harley, Anthony, Bobbet, Filmer, Smithwick, Juengling, Annin, and Closson. Among many choice pictures, we may mention the "Mill Stream," after A. T. Bricher; "On the Hudson," James D. Smillie; "Training the Surf Horse," George Innes, Jr.; "Autumn Woods," Homer D. Marten; "A Glimpse of Franconia Notch," F. H. Smith; "Midsummer Retreat," A. H. Wyant; "The Last Gleam," William Hart, and R. D. Porter's "Mandolin Player."

—The Microcosm and Other Poems. By Abraham Coles, M. D., LL. D. New-York: D. Appleton & Co. 1881.—The main poem of this highly ornamental volume was published in 1866, and read by the author before the Medical Society of New-Jersey, of which he was at that time President. It is certainly a curious production, even for the President of a medical society. For instance, page 65 is headed "Insertion—Digestion—Assimilation;" and the lines that follow run thus:

"So in our mouths to sanctify our Food;
Begin the process changing it to Blood.
We dare not call that common and unclean
Which Thou hast cleansed—nor count that longer mean.
So honored by assimilations grand
And exaltations of Thine own right hand,
As through the channels of the body rolled
Th' ingested Morsel comes to be ensouled."

Numerous foot-notes explain technically the similes used for such things as the gastric juice, the white and gray tissues of the brain, &c. Such terms as "Theopneusty," on the other hand, will need the largest kind of dictionary. Further on one reads:

"Teach the strict Lacteals duly thus to guide
Into the narrow way from out the wide,
Where freed from Science all white and clean,
And trained through mazes of the Glands between,
For saintly fellowship and spousals sweet
With the dear Lymph, as they together meet
Within the Duct Thoracic mount to gain
The level of the pierced Subclavian Vein."

Dr. Coles shows as much piety as learning, and mixes the Bible in equal portions with the "Manual of Surgery." It would be a mistake to infer, however, that Dr. Coles is always ridiculous; on the contrary, some of his hymns for children are beautiful in their simplicity and truth. His piety is evidently of the most sincere kind; he writes from the heart. And it should be added that even in the medical form, in which love for his profession has caused him to lean too far toward the baldness of realism, his evident sincerity of purpose makes the effort respectable. The flavor of his book is most quaint, suggesting, on the religious side, George Herbert, and on the naturalistic side the elder Darwin, who, in "The Botanic Garden," laid the seed of the revolution in science accomplished by the patient genius of his grandson. It may be recommended for these qualities to lovers of curiosities in literature, and to those who look for religious poetry attractively bound and illustrated, with engravings from photographs, for its suitableness as a gift-book.

LITERARY NOTES.

—It is said that the pugnacious woman whose nom de plume is "Gail Hamilton" is engaged in writing the reminiscences of her girlhood.

—The rare copy of Shelley's "Queen Mab," unique by reason of Mrs. Shelley's annotations, was recently sold at auction in London for $150.

—Mr. Edmund W. Gosse's selection of the best English odes from Spenser to Swinburne, with a critical introduction, will make one of the volumes of the Parchment Library.

—The Moscow Gazette has lately achieved a sensation by publishing daily, during the great State trial, telegraphic reports, extending to over five columns of close print in some cases.

—Mr. R. H. Shepherd's "Bibliography of Thackeray" will be published shortly, in uniform style with his bibliographies of Tennyson, Ruskin, and Dickens, by Mr. Elliot Stock.

—The author of "Olric Grange" has written a new poem, entitled "Raban; or, Life-splinters," which Mr. Macklehose, publisher to the University of Glasgow, will issue immediately.

—Dr. Guest, the author of the "History of English Rhythms," a man quite unrivaled in his special lines of study, has just died. He resigned the mastership of Caius College only a few weeks ago.

—Mr. Charles Hatch Smith has just issued a patriotic poem entitled "Liberties; Past, Present, and Future," published by T. B. Ventress, of Brooklyn. Besides being a poet, Mr. Smith is well known as a musician, having written many graceful songs.

—Prof. Huxley has in the press a new volume of lectures and essays. It will include the recent address at Birmingham on "Science and Culture," the lectures on "Technical Education," on "Evolution," on "The Coming Age of Darwinism," and several others. Macmillan & Co. will be the publishers.

—The late Thomas Tod Stoddart, of Kelso, has been known as one of the chief anglers of Scotland for the last half-century. He succeeded in writing books on angling much better than in his poetical ventures, for which he was severely castigated by Christopher North in Blackwood. He left his autobiography ready for the press.

—M. Francois Lenormant, the results of whose archæological tour in Southern Italy have appeared from time to time in the Academy, and are by far the most complete studies of this interesting district which have ever been written, is engaged in seeing through the press a work in three volumes entitled "La Grande Grèce, Paysages et Histoire," the first of which will appear in a few weeks.

—Several new volumes in the English Men of Letters Series have been given to different writers. "Charles Dickens" will be done by Prof. A. W. Ward, "De Quincey" by Prof. David Masson, and "Charles Lamb" by the Rev. Alfred Ainger. Mr. Frederick Myers's "Wordsworth" will be published by the Harpers in a few days, and Mr. George Saintbury's "Dryden" is in the press.

—The "Revised Version of the New Testament" is promised for February next, and a "Companion to the Revised Version," prepared by the Rev. Alexander Roberts, D. D., Professor of Humanity at St. Andrew's University, Aberdeen, and a member of the New Testament Company, explaining the reasons for the changes made in the Authorized Version, will be published simultaneously by Cassell, Petter, Galpin & Co.

—Profs. Riggenbach and Stockmeyer have edited a new edition of the Greek New Testament, published by the Bible Society of Basle, in an octave volume of 608 pages, in which they have endeavored to give the original and most ancient text, taking as their basis the text of the eighth edition of Tischendorf, without slavishly following his various readings. The volume is primarily dedicated to the Bible-reading Greeks in Greece and in the Ottoman Empire.

—The Academy states that the late Chief-Justice Cockburn had promised to print in that journal the results of his extensive researches into the question of the authorship of the "Letters of Junius." He had considered it deeply, and had studied the matter of handwriting both by his own visits to the British Museum, and at second hand through the investigations of an expert. The work grew under his hands into a substantial volume on "Junius and his Times," and it is believed that these manuscripts, upon a matter of perennial curiosity, are left in a condition to be published.

—Notwithstanding Mr. Forman is believed to have gathered into his four volumes of Shelley's prose works every scrap the poet ever penned, Mr. Richard Garnet, an equal authority in all that pertains to Shelley, has undertaken to edit for the Parchment Library a selection of the letters of Shelley, to include only such matter as is good, in a literary sense, (and the better part of Shelley's correspondence is good indeed,) and aiming at the same time to exhibit the writer fully in all aspects of his character and work. The proposed volume will be welcomed by many to whom Shelley's correspondence is as yet but vaguely known.

—The Boston publishing-house of James R. Osgood & Co. appears to have emerged from its two years of retirement with renewed and staying life and energy. Their superb illustrated edition of Tennyson's "A Dream of Fair Women" has been the most successful holiday book of the season, and it has been very difficult to keep pace with the unexpected demand. The children's friends have exhausted fresh editions of "The Peterkin Papers" and the charming "Stories of the Saints," and those of reflective years have been richly gratified with such new books as the "Radical Club," Congdon's "Reminiscences," and James Freeman Clarke's "Self-Culture." In the new illustrated biographies of Millet and Hunt, in Winckelmann's "History of Ancient Art," and a group of similar works the increasing army of art students and art lovers find delightful companions.

—Mr. James Anthony Froude, whose brother, Richard Hurrell Froude, was, up to the time of his death, one of the chief leaders in the Tractarian movement in the English Church, who has told the story of his own escape from that form of Christianity in the strange book entitled "The Nemesis of Faith," which has been republished in this country, is about to publish in Good Words, in the form of a series of letters addressed to a friend, his "Personal Reminiscences of the High Church Revival." They will begin with the new year, the first letter on "The Church of England Fifty Years Ago" appearing in the January number. Others will follow in successive numbers, treating of "The Tractarians," "John Henry Newman," "Tract 90 and its Consequences," "The Lives of the Saints," and related topics. The personal details and outspoken criticisms of these papers are certain to arouse much interest.

—Mr. George W. Curtis, in the "Easy Chair" of Harper for January, rightly calls that venerable periodical (begun 51 years ago "the people's magazine") "its original object, in the days of the old Knickerbocker, was to give the public, every month, the largest miscellany of the best popular reading from foreign and native authors, "without prosing or preaching, or any kind of namby-pamby." When Harper began, illustrated periodicals, in the modern sense, were unknown. Mr. Curtis calls the present following of Harper, in his happy phrase, "a diocese of readers, and, as long as the tact and experience, which have helped to make the magazine what it is continue to control it, its diocese will be constantly widening. It is a part of its editorial policy to take up no controverted questions, and to touch as nearly as possible only what interest all the diocese of readers." This is not trimming sails, however; it is only furnishing wholesome family reading of the best sort. The publication of an English edition may already be counted a success.

REVISING THE ESTIMATES.

INFORMATION WANTED FROM THE PARK DEPARTMENT.

The Board of Estimate and Apportionment took up the final estimates for 1881 yesterday, beginning with the estimates for the Mayor's office. It was decided to appropriate $40,000 for the expenses of that office during the coming year. Park Commissioner Wales asked the board to give him a hearing at some future day about the Park Department estimates, and after he had gone Park Commissioner Lane appeared and said he was ready to explain anything about the estimates at once. Mayor Cooper said he noticed the Department had made no proper separation of salaried men and employes in their estimates, and, on his motion, the Park Commissioners were requested to make such a separation. Mr. Lane explained that the salary list varied from time to time. Mr. Cooper replied that he saw no reason why the Park Department should not comply with the law, and make a proper distinction between the two classes of employes.

"Sometimes we have more men on the salary list than usual, and sometimes less," said Mr. Lane.

"But you can't do it," said the Mayor; "you can't distinguish between a clerk, for instance, and a mason," the Mayor asked.

"Our salary account is really very small," was the answer.

"Then," said Mayor Cooper, "let it so appear on the records. I have no objection to saying that I will not vote for an appropriation for salaries and labor unless the two items are separated. If you can't do it, we will have to do the best way we can. We want a detailed statement of the salary list of your Department. We want to discuss particulars, not things in general."

Mr. Lane asked what time the board would want to hear from the department, and said it was pretty hard to do any business in the Park Commissioners' Board just now. It was decided to hear the Park Commissioners on Tuesday morning, and the morrow the board will listen to the representatives of the Fire Department and the Board of Education. On Friday the Departments of Public Works and of Charities and Correction will be heard. The Police Department and Board of Health will be discussed on Monday. To-day another session to listen to tax-payers will be held. The law requires that the board shall finally pass upon the estimates before Jan. 1.

FUNERAL OF JAMES M. MORRISON.

The funeral of James M. Morrison, late President of the Manhattan Company, took place yesterday afternoon from the South Reformed Church, Fifth-avenue and Twenty-first-street. The Rev. Dr. E. P. Rogers officiated, assisted by the Rev. Dr. William M. Taylor and the Rev. Dr. John Hall, each of whom made short addresses. To use the words of Dr. Hall, there were in the congregation "the men who could give tone and life to the business of the City." Seldom has so large a representation of the leading bankers and business men been assembled at one time. The bearers were Messrs. Samuel Sloan, George D. H. Gillespie, John Sloan, John Hansen Rhoades, George S. Coe, Samuel D. Babcock, Jacob Vermilye, John A. Stewart, Nathaniel Putnam, and R. M. Sherman. Among others present were Dr. M. Chalmers, Messrs. Alexander and William Taylor, John Wolfe, Wilson G. Hunt, William Wood, and the following of the Sabbath Committee, of which Mr. Morrison was one of the original members and for 25 years the Treasurer: Norman White, J. S. Winston, Gerard Beekman, Robert Carter, Theodore Gilman, William Alexander Smith, W. W. Atterbury, John E. Parsons, and John C. Havemeyer. The officers and clerks of the Manhattan Company were present in a body, including J. T. Baldwin, Cashier; E. A. Reid, Assistant Cashier; Robert Elder, Transportation Agent; E. S. Scott, E. Max Reid, and C. T. Kissam, Tellers, and J. D. Tolten, book-keeper. Owing to the death on Monday evening of Mr. David Morrison's child, Janet, granddaughter of the deceased, Mr. Morrison's body will be kept in the church until Thursday, when the bodies of both grandfather and granddaughter will be interred in Woodlawn Cemetery.

THE NEW FRENCH STEAM-SHIP LINE.

Messrs. Funch, Edye & Co., have received additional advices by mail regarding the new line of steamers about to be started by the Compagnie Générale Bordelaise, of Bordeaux, France. The company intend to establish a fortnightly service between this port and Bordeaux, and to that end have contracted for the building of four first-class steamers of 3,000 tons capacity, and a speed capable of making the passage in 12 days. They will also have accommodations for a number of passengers. Until these are finished, the company will charter vessels for service in the interim. The first, the Ville d'Alger, will leave Bordeaux on the 28th inst. The company has been organized with a capital of 3,000,000f. When the shares were offered for subscription, 4,000,000f. were offered. There is a bill now before the French Senate, having passed the Assembly, granting large subsidies to all steamers built in France. It is expected that it will soon become a law. In addition to this the company has been subsidized by the Bordeaux Chamber of Commerce, the Orleans Railway, and the railroads of the South of France. The President is M. Armand Lalande, also President of the Bordeaux Chamber of Commerce, and the Vice-President is M. Hubert Prom, also Vice-President of the Bordeaux Chamber of Commerce. M. Charles Lapat, marine engineer, is Secretary, and M. Henri Bordes, manager.

MISCELLANEOUS CITY NEWS

AID FOR THE SICK IN HOSPITALS.

INSTITUTIONS WHICH WILL SHARE IN THE SATURDAY AND SUNDAY COLLECTIONS.

In the list of institutions to share in the benefits of the Hospital Saturday and Sunday collection is the Woman's Hospital, which has now reached the twenty-fifth year of its existence. During that period it has treated 4,337 patients, of whom 2,460 returned to their homes cured, while the conditions of others were decidedly improved. The staff of the out-door department held in the same space of time 27,175 consultations. Most of the persons treated were afflicted with diseases which, before the time of Dr. Sims and his successors, were regarded as incurable. Under the new methods patients are almost invariably enabled to return to their homes with sufficient health and vigor to bear the burdens and responsibilities of domestic life. The property and general management of the Woman's Hospital are vested in a Board of Governors, the supervision of its domestic affairs being intrusted to a Board of Lady Supervisors. On the medical staff are Drs. Emmet, Thomas Bozeman, and other well-known physicians and surgeons. The women composing the corps of nurses are carefully selected by members of the Board of Lady Supervisors. It is claimed on the part of the management that it has accomplished, among other things, the following: The development of a new era in one important department of surgery; it has been the means of bringing relief to more than 20,000 suffering women, who could not have obtained the same aid elsewhere; it has trained and sent forth from every quarter of the land, while it remains to-day more prosperous and more useful than ever before—a model of what a special hospital should be. Notwithstanding the receipt of generous contributions from its friends and patrons, additional financial resources are required to meet outstanding liabilities. According to its constitution, a free bed in perpetuity can be endowed for $5,000; a free bed for two lives, $3,000; and a free bed for one year, $300. Sectarian distinctions are not considered in the admission of patients. Of the two persons received during the past year, 101 were beneficiary patients, and the consultations of the out-door department were entirely gratuitous. Mr. Clinton Gilbert, of No. 73 Sixth-avenue, is the Treasurer.

The Presbyterian Hospital, which is also one of the applicants for a share of the Hospital Saturday and Sunday collection, had its origin in a letter addressed by the late James Lenox, on Jan. 2, 1868, to a number of leading Presbyterians in this City, in which Mr. Lenox directed attention to the fact that while the Jews, Germans, Episcopalians, and others had each their special hospital, the large and influential body of Presbyterians had no institution of this kind under its supervision. Mr. Lenox asked for the co-operation of the persons to whom he addressed his letter, and informed them that should a hospital be organized, an eligible plot of ground suitable for the necessary buildings and $100,000 in funds would be given to the managers. His munificent offer was accepted, and the Presbyterian Hospital was organized that year with a board of 30 managers. Eight of the number are chosen each year. To the board were added as ex-officio members the ministers of the First Presbyterian Church and the Madison-square Church, the senior minister of the Collegiate Reformed (Dutch) Church and the Pastor of the First Reformed Presbyterian Church. Mr. Lenox was elected President of the board, a position which he filled until the day of his death. He deeded to the managers the block of ground bounded by Seventieth and Seventy-first streets, Madison and Park-avenues, and increased his gift of funds to $250,000. Others also subscribed liberally, enabling the board immediately to begin the work of building a hospital, which was opened on Oct. 10, 1872, for the reception of patients of every age, sex, nationality, and color. An endowment fund was started, to which the President and others subscribed. The structures erected are of brick trimmed with Lockport limestone. The hospital pavilion, which is entirely isolated from the other buildings, has a capacity for about 90 patients. Plans originally adopted provided for the erection of two other pavilions large enough to accommodate 180 more. Since the opening of the hospital over 3,000 patients have been received, the care being free of charge. Since the death of Mr. Lenox the office of President has been filled by Mr. Robert L. Stuart. The Rev. Thomas S. Wall, the present Superintendent, is the Chaplain. During the past three years the expenses of the institution have largely exceeded the income from the endowment fund and the aggregate of subscriptions received, so that the Board of Managers has been obliged to borrow about $30,000 from the endowment or invested funds. With a view to making up this deficiency and increasing the endowment, a special appeal for aid has just been issued. Mr. Robert L. Stuart has offered $50,000 on condition that the additional $100,000 is subscribed by others. A free bed in perpetuity can be endowed for $5,000, a bed for life for $3,000, and $100 given to the limited free bed fund entitles the donor to the privilege of sending patients at the rate of $6 per week until the amount is used up. The Treasurer of the hospital is Mr. Robert Lenox Belknap, of No. 23 Fifth-avenue.

AN INSURANCE COMPANY'S FUNDS.

HOW THE RECEIVER IS TO TREAT THE POLICIES OF THE CONTINENTAL.

An important decision respecting the distribution of the funds in the hands of the Receiver of the Continental Insurance Company has been made by Judge Westbrook in the Supreme Court, Special Term, at Kingston. All claims against this company were required to be filed on or before June 16, 1879. The policies of certain persons who died prior to that date were presented to the Receiver as if they were still running, and not as death claims, and the persons presenting them accepted without objection a dividend of 2 per cent declared by the Receiver upon the reserve value of running policies. The motion was made by Mr. William Barnes, before Judge Westbrook, to have these policies valued as death claims. The same attorney moved, also, to have a like change made in the character of a claim, based upon a policy, whose subject died after June 16, 1879. Mr. Barnes also moved for the admission of death claims which matured before that date but were filed after it as running policies, and upon which no dividends had been paid. Mr. Rauhaut J. Moses moved for the admission of claims upon policies which have not yet been filed. These motions were opposed by George W. Wingate, counsel for the Receiver; Mr. S. W. Kneveal, counsel for the Attorney-General, and Mr. Whiting, counsel for policy-holders. They objected to the allowance of claims for death that have occurred since June 16, 1879, because injustice would be done to living policy-holders, the liabilities of the company would be increased by $1,000,000 a year, and it would be made practically impossible for the Receiver to settle up the affairs of the company. They argued that clear proof of mistake should be exacted before any claim entered upon an alleged running policy, on which a dividend was accepted, should be charged to a death claim maturing prior to June 16, 1879. It was also urged by the counsel for the Receiver, the Attorney-General, and the holders of running policies, that if it were decided to admit any claims not filed prior to the date fixed a general order should be made for the admission of all whose holders could give valid excuses for their delay.

Judge Westbrook has decided that a death claim must have matured prior to June 16, 1879, and that a policy upon which a death occurred after that date can only be admitted upon its reserve value as a running policy. The reason for this, he says, is that if claims accepted by the Receiver upon running policies should be allowed to be revalued as death claims, it would be impossible to ascertain the company's liabilities, and to determine what dividends could be paid from time to time. As to the claims which were filed prior to June 16, 1879, as upon running policies, and upon which dividends were accepted, when the claimants knew that the subjects of the policies were dead, Judge Westbrook holds that they cannot be revalued as death claims. He also decides that the court can permit any claim to be presented and accepted by the Receiver, as if it were filed before the end of the time previously fixed, upon good cause being shown for the delay. An order is to be prepared fixing a time in which claimants may make their excuses for delay, and file their claims, if their explanations are held good.

THE PROCEEDS OF A BURGLARY.

David C. Bliss, alias "the Doctor," and Matthew Lane were arrested yesterday morning on coming ashore from the steamer Providence, of the Old Colony Line, in this City. In their possession was found a trunk containing the following miscellaneous collection of goods: Three and a half dozen ivory tablets, 3 dozen plated dessert spoons, 15 dozen nickel-plated teaspoons, 16 dozen nickel-plated tablespoons, 14 dozen nickel-plated forks, 1 fork, 10 plated table-knives, 9 plated pocket-knives, 3 porcelain inkstands, 7 large-sized decorated china plates, 8 flutes, 3 china vases, 1 small pitcher and pail, 2 ornamental napkin-holders, 1 ornamental lamp, 1 porcelain landscape, 1 pair of trousers, and a sealskin cap. The property is supposed to be the proceeds of a burglary either in Boston or in the vicinity. The prisoners and the property are in the hands of the Police.

SHIPS WAITING DOWN THE BAY.

Two European steam-ships, the Otranto, of the Wilson Line, from Hull, and the Averill, from West Hartlepool, arrived in the Lower Bay yesterday, but did not come up to the City. The weather was very thick in the morning, and the few sailing vessels which arrived anchored inside the Hook, and did not run the risk of a collision by attempting to come up. The steam-ship Albemarle, from Lewes, Del., arrived yesterday. She reports having passed a severe night off the Jersey coast. A number of vessels were dismasted off the coast yesterday, but it is probable that they all proceeded slowly on account of the snow-storm.

DEATH OF MATRON BARNARD.

Mrs. Caroline J. Barnard, who has been for the past 10 years matron of the Five Points House of Industry, died yesterday. She had recently recovered from a stroke of paralysis, and a few mornings since, while entering the store-room of the institution, fell over some boxes, severely injuring herself. The shock proved too much for her, and resulted in her death yesterday. Mrs. Barnard was a native of Nantucket, and was 69 years of age. She was a lady of refinement, and had thoroughly identified herself with the institution in which she had so long labored. She was well known as a kind and careful mother by those who contributed toward the support of the Five Points House of Industry. Mr. Stephen Tuttle, superintendent of the institution is a son of the deceased matron.

SCHEMES BEFORE THE ALDERMEN.

RAILROAD TRACKS PROPOSED FOR BROADWAY—THE EDISON LIGHT.

A new scheme for covering lower Broadway and other streets with railroad tracks was laid before the Board of Aldermen yesterday in the form of a petition from "The Greene Track Pavement Company." After stating that lower Broadway is frequently crowded and "blocked" with the countless vehicles which use it as a thoroughfare, causing great detriment to business, the petitioners asked permission to "lay down a complete equipment of five sets of tracks," with three tracks or rails in each set, to suit the gauge of every kind of vehicle, from Union-square through Broadway, and such other streets as lead from Broadway to South, Wall, and Fulton Ferries. They then asked for the privilege of running light and convenient vehicles for carrying passengers and baggage, at a speed not exceeding 20 minutes from Union-square to either of the ferries; vehicles to be run at intervals of two minutes, and the fare to be 5 cents, to include the carrying of 50 pounds of personal baggage. The fare, they say, ought to be "pro rated with all connecting omnibus and horse railroad lines that desire this arrangement, and excluding and prohibiting all other vehicles from carrying passengers, except such as now run in Broadway." In consideration of the this decidedly valuable grant, the Greene Track Pavement Company proposed to keep the streets in which their tracks were laid well paved, tracked, and cleaned from dirt or snow, and to pay into the City Treasury 1 cent for every full fare collected, this amount to be allowed to the tax-payers occupying the property bounding the said streets by a corresponding reduction of their taxes." The company also petitioned for the privilege of laying down 100 feet of a set of three tracks on the north side of Fourteenth-street at Union-square, and north and west from those tracks, as an experimental test of the scheme, the tracks to be guaged for all sorts of vehicles. In conclusion, the company proposed to suggest "that they hoped this would be the entering wedge" toward the laying of tracks in every street in the City, such as would permit the use of compressed air as a motor power for any and all kinds of vehicles. The petition was signed by E. S. Greene, President, and Edwin S. Higgins, Treasurer. Attached to the paper was a statement giving the following as Trustees of the company: Abram Wakeman, William Barnes, Nathaniel Wheeler, John McCall, Myron Ferry, Allen S. Heath, M. D., John R. Johnson, Charles C. Hine, Matthew Griffin, M. D., Hamilton Ewald, W. Searing, Dolphus Terry, J. S. Lambert, M. D., John S. Hayes, and James S. Brown. Dr. T. S. Lambert was given as the "inventor of the track."

The petition was referred to the Committee on Railroads without being read, and then the President introduced another petition from the Edison Electric Light Company, in which the petitioners asked for permission to lay tubes, wires, conductors, and insulators, and to erect lamp-posts within the limits of the streets, avenues, parks, and public places of the City for the purpose of electric illumination. The petitioners stated that they would pay the entire cost of restoring, repaving, &c., all streets used by them, and to give bonds in $50,000 that they would properly comply with conditions imposed upon them by the authorities. Without being read, the petition was referred to the Committee on Law. The Aldermen passed an ordinance requiring boatmen in New-York waters to display a red light when using their boats at night, and then adjourned to meet again immediately as a Board of County Canvassers to recount the votes cast for Coroner in Coroners' District from the Ninth District at the recent election. The session was held in accordance with an order issued by Judge Donohue, of the Supreme Court. The canvassers took 25 votes from the total credited to Frederick L. Bruns in the Ninth Coroners' District, and added them to the vote credited to John Hardy, making the corrected returns from that district stand: Hunt, 2,956; Hardy, 2,040.

VANDERBILT'S RAILROADS.

STATEMENTS SHOWING GREATLY INCREASED PROSPERITY.

The four Vanderbilt railroad companies made public their annual statements yesterday. That of the New-York Central and Hudson River Company is for the fiscal year ending Sept. 30. It shows total earnings of $23,175,913 88, and total expenses, including interest, rentals, and State tax, of $22,036,608 72. After paying 6 per cent dividends there was left a surplus of $3,427,705 16. The profits amounted to 11.89 per cent per share, against 6.49 per cent last year. There has been expended from the surplus for construction during the year $9,881,439 88. This includes $1,066,915 08 for land purchased at Buffalo, Syracuse, and Sixty-third-street, in this City; $1,407,156 99 for 8,009 new cars, and $369,050 for 97 additional locomotives.

The statement of the Michigan Central Company is to Jan. 1, 1881, December, 1880, being partly estimated. The gross earnings were $9,100,000, and the total expenses, including taxes, interest, and rentals, $7,350,000, leaving a balance equal to 6.49 per cent per share, against 5.37 per cent last year. After payment of 5 per cent in dividends, $70,000 in full settlement of claims for the Jackson accident, and $100,000 for construction, there was a surplus remaining of $905,000. The construction account has been charged with land, $45,000; and with six and one-half miles of additional second track, $55,000. Operating expenses include the cost of 450 new freight cars, $400,000; and also the cost of 4,700 tons of steel rails, of new iron bridges, $40,000; and of new buildings and additions to old ones, $48,000.

The statement of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Company is also for the calendar year 1880, December being partly estimated. The gross earnings were $18,000,000, and the total expenses, including taxes, interest, rentals, and dividends on guaranteed stock, $13,180,000, leaving a balance equal to 11.94 per cent per share against 6.94 per cent last year. After paying 5 per cent in dividends and appropriating $300,000 to the sinking fund, a surplus remains of $1,580,000. The operating expenses include the cost of 1,500 new freight cars, $700,000; of 7,000 tons of new steel rails, &c.

The statement of the Canada Southern Company is also for the calendar year 1880, December being partly estimated. The total earnings of the company were $3,730,819 41, and the total expenses, including taxes and interest, $2,612,112 41, leaving a balance equal to 6.12 per cent on the stock, against 1.06 per cent last year. Of the balance there was expended in construction, $145,000; in the settlement of old claims, $45,712 58, and in reduction of bills and accounts payable, $818,236 93, leaving enough for a dividend of 2½ per cent, and a surplus of $97,332 97. The Directors of the Lake Shore and Michigan Central Companies adopted resolutions to pay dividends quarterly hereafter.

MISSING FROM HIS FRIENDS.

ANXIETY ABOUT A FRENCHMAN WHO HAD MONEY IN HIS POSSESSION.

The disappearance of M. Jules Delbos, a wealthy Frenchman, was reported at Police Headquarters yesterday. He has been missing since last Thursday, and the efforts of his friends to find him having failed to secure any trace of his whereabouts, they have applied to the Police to assist in the search. M. Delbos is about 35 years of age, and though he did no regular business he was financially interested in a French company formed to manufacture sugar from turnips

The Signal Service Bureau report indicates for to-day, in this region, clear or partly cloudy weather, with northerly to westerly winds, rising barometer, and slight change in temperature.

Senator Wryte, of Maryland, proposes an amendment of the Constitution permanently fixing the number of Judges of the Supreme Court. He thinks the Judiciary should be entirely independent of the Legislative and Executive Departments of the Government, and that no political party should have power to increase the number of Judges in its interest. Better yet, no political party should have any desire to do so. It is a question whether it would be expedient to preclude the possibility of a future increase of the capacity of a tribunal whose labor must of necessity increase with the growth of the country. Fixedness of the area of the country has nothing to do with the question, and no multiplication of subordinate courts would prevent an increase of the business which must, of necessity come before the tribunal of last resort. The number of Judges certainly should not be increased unless the business of the court requires it, but if it becomes a necessity there should be a way of accomplishing it without the difficult and protracted process of amending the Constitution. It is doubtful whether Congress is to be held to its responsibility more effectually by curtailing its constitutional powers.

The Protestants of Ulster are apparently not joining the Land League, but they are beginning to show great impatience over the resolute refusal of the Gladstone Cabinet to resort to measures of coercion. There is no great measure of Irish reform which ever secured the support of the Orangemen, and it is doubtful if even the embodiment in Irish legislation of what is known as the Ulster tenant right would be regarded by them with much favor. But, however little these protests may serve to sway the policy of the English Government, they help to illustrate what would be the condition of Ireland under Home Rule or Independence. The bitterness with which the majority of Irishmen regard English rule would certainly be found to have been less intense than the feelings which would be engendered between Irish factions left free to fight out their own battles. Just as the elimination of the landlord will need to be a carefully guarded process if it is not to be followed by the creation of a lower order of rack-rented tenants than now exist, so the yielding of local governing power to the Irish people must depend entirely on the rapidity with which Irishmen cease "hating each other for the love of God." The sins of the fathers are being vented with a vengeance on the Parliament and people who have such a set of problems to solve as those now presented in the sister Isle.

Gen. Sherman cannot be accused of what is known in Europe as "militarism," for no great soldier has more emphatically expressed his sense of the horrible repulsiveness of war. But Gen. Sherman does not believe that we shall have any guarantee for the preservation of peace by reducing our Army to a skeleton and making the soldier's career so unpromising and so harassing as to keep out of it any man who possesses ability or self-respect. The General evidently holds that one very essential antidote against civil strife is the maintenance of a compact, well-organized, and fully officered military force, equal to any demands likely to be made upon it for the defense of life and property, and capable of expansion at very short notice into an army before which riot or revolt would speedily subside. The optimism of after-dinner talk may not have any serious effect on the policy of the country, but it shows how fully Gen. Sherman is impressed with the magnitude of the latent dangers to our present peace and security, that he could not refrain from alluding to them, even amid the jubilant chorus over our present happy state, at the Brooklyn New-England dinner.

Considering the strength of the New-England element in Brooklyn, it is surprising that a New-England Society was not, long ago, one of the most flourishing institutions of the sister city. The brilliant opening of the dinner-giving career of the recently founded society argues a most promising future, though, with all respect for Forefathers' Day, the brethren of New-York and Brooklyn might arrange a compromise by which their annual dinner should be separated by the interval of at least a week. There are really not enough distinguished orators to go round, and robust as may be the digestion of Mr. Evarts, Mr. Depew, or Mr. Beecher, it is exposing them to quite unnecessary peril to compel them to take two such dinners in immediate succession. As for the President of the United States, even of the abstemious type now in office, who, greatly daring, dines, in the lavish fashion of modern New-Englanders, on both sides of the East River, and that within the space of twenty-four hours, his case is calculated to furnish a new argument for selecting our Vice-President with special regard to the possibilities of succession to the Executive chair. It is hardly necessary to add that, whether in or out of office, a man who can make so admirable a little speech as President Hayes did last night deserves to have a long and happy career, unclouded by the afterthought of too much public dining.

CURRENT WORK IN THE HOUSE.

Besides dispatching several of the minor appropriation bills, the House of Representatives in the past three weeks has devoted some of its time to questions of taxation and finance. It must be admitted that the outcome has not been very valuable. On Monday an effort was made to pass a bill repealing the act which requires stamps on checks against bank deposits. Most of the time ostensibly given to the subject was surrendered to an intricate discussion of those parliamentary questions which seem fated to absorb a great part of the energies of any deliberative body. This having been disposed of, the debate on the merits of the bill began, and was the occasion of some of the most remarkable statements of economic opinion that we remember to have seen. The opposition to the measure was based almost exclusively on the assumption that the banks pay the stamp tax, though one statesman took a different and equally original ground, by declaring that the banks desired the continuance of the tax, because it induced depositors to have their deposits undrawn for a longer time. The notion that the banks pay the tax springs from that frame of mind into which so many of our legislators get whenever banks are mentioned. They imagine that the banks are the concrete embodiment of that abstract entity, the "money power," of which they stand in such terror, and that every tax which is imposed on the use or possession of money rests, directly or indirectly, on these mysterious and hated institutions. It would seem that they should be able to understand that even if the banks paid the stamp tax in the first instance—which they do not do, except on the comparatively insignificant number of the checks drawn by themselves—they are not deserving of their reputation for sagacity and cunning if they do not manage to wring the amount out of their customers. But as a matter of fact, and of such simple and obvious fact that it would be absurd to state it, if the pages of the Record did not show that a considerable number of Congressmen are ignorant of it, the stamp tax on checks is paid by the men who draw the checks, by the depositors when they use their money. And this tax falls heaviest not, as these gentlemen suppose, on those best able to pay it, but exactly the other way, because a two-cent stamp on a check for $10 is ten times larger a percentage on the transaction than the same stamp on $100, and one hundred times greater than on a check for $1,000. The retail grocer, the shopkeeper, or the small mechanic who keeps a bank account is almost immeasurably more taxed for the convenience, safety, and general advantage he may derive from it than is the larger dealer. The majority of the House favor the repeal of the tax, but the bill has probably been so delayed by the failure to suspend the rules on Monday that it is unlikely to pass this session.

Yesterday the House took up the Refunding bill. It was sharply opposed, and Mr. Wood was unable to get any limit set upon the debate, or what passes by that name, in the House. Mr. Randall earnestly supported the general purpose of the bill, but the most bitter opposition came from his side of the House. One leading Democrat denounced the measure as intended to make slaves of at least this generation and the next of the American people. The discussion soon glided into a petty, and, in some regards, disgraceful exchange of partisan accusations between the representative Greenbackers and a few Democrats, which, it is reported, was greatly enjoyed by the Republicans, though it ought not to have been gratifying to any man of sense with a decent regard for the interests and dignity of the country. It is not likely that Mr. Wood can do anything with his bill to-day, though its ultimate passage in substantially its present form is not doubtful.

Before taking up the Refunding bill, the House voted down a resolution, proposed by Mr. Robeson, providing for the counting of the Electoral votes, for no other reason, apparently, than that it was presented by a Republican. The resolution is identical in form with that under which, as Mr. Robeson announced, every Presidential vote has been counted up to the second election of Mr. Lincoln. So far as it relates to the differences of opinion as to the powers of the two houses or of the President of the Senate, this resolution cannot offend either side, as it does not declare or involve the theories of either side. It is entirely proper that a resolution making the necessary provision for the Electoral count shall be passed, as that is the only form now available for disposing of the matter, and it is the duty of the Republican Party to propose such a resolution, since the majority neglect or refuse to do so in a form free from radical objection. It may yet become the duty of the minority, by every means afforded by parliamentary rules or customs, to insist upon the passage of the resolution which they present, since the necessity is obvious and constantly becomes more urgent, for providing for the count. But it is greatly to be hoped, from every point of view, that the leading Democrats will see the folly and wrong of allowing their peculiar views to prevent them from making such provision in a case which cannot possibly give rise to action affording a precedent against them. If they should come to a sense of their duty, a resolution substantially like that of Mr. Robeson is what they will be most likely to present. If they do not realize their obligation in the premises in time, they will assume a degree of responsibility which they are in no condition to bear.

"ARCADES AMBO."

Yesterday was a day of uproar in the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States. On a subject so dry and unpromising as the Funding bill, there was fanned up a breeze which proved so serious, at last, that the House was obliged to adjourn in order to allow the agitated passions of the disputants to cool. Mr. Fernando Wood desires to press the Funding bill to a vote before the holiday recess. Taunted with forcing through the House a measure of the very first importance with scarcely a quorum present, he replied that the constituents of gentlemen who fail to vote on the bill should not fail to notice the delinquency of their Representatives. Then some of the ingenious gentlemen who profess to believe in an unlimited issue of greenbacks and an indefinite date of payment of the national debt managed to make themselves heard. The illustrious Mr. Bland, for example, referred in feeling terms to the "godless greed" of the Wall-street operators, at whose feet the gentlemen in favor of the Funding bill were supposed to be groveling.

It was reserved for Mr. Sparks, of Illinois, to rouse the Greenback candidate for President. How this happened, even the full reports of proceedings which we print do not explain. In a tone of light and airy pleasantry, Sparks and Weaver bandied words. If they playfully called each other rascals and scoundrels, everybody understood that this was purely in a Pickwickian sense. But Mr. Sparks is a Democrat, and he is naturally sensitive to any reproach cast upon his party, just now defeated at the polls. So, as the best of friends, indulging in a little horse play, may sometimes fall out when one gives the other an unexpected and violent blow on the nose, it came to pass that Sparks suddenly wanted to know if the gentleman from Iowa—meaning Weaver—used the word "falsehood" with intentional seriousness. Weaver replied good-humoredly. But Sparks, who felt the stinging blow upon his nose, (metaphorically speaking,) replied: "You misunderstood me. I said you were stating what was not true, and that you were wanting in the qualities of a gentleman in your failure to remedy it." The official report of the Congress of the United States says that this polished and gentlemanlike assertion was made amid "excitement and confusion." This is quite possible. And when Mr. Sparks added that the Presidential election developed the fact that Mr. Weaver was lacking in "those qualities," meaning those of a gentleman, Mr. Weaver's cup of bitterness was full, and the long jest turned to earnest.

Mr. Weaver was, to put it mildly, as mad as a March hare. With that fervor and enthusiasm which has always distinguished him, he cried, "I denounce the gentleman as a liar on the floor of this House." How Sparks could be a gentleman and a liar we cannot stop to inquire. Every member is supposed to be a gentleman, and there is no term by which he can be impersonally characterized but that of "the gentleman from"—anywhere. But the gentleman from Illinois was ready with his pleasant repartee, and he playfully replied to Mr. Weaver, "You are a scoundrel and a villain." The two illustrious law-makers then pulled off their coats and made for each other, being separated by the area in front of the Speaker's desk. Judicious friends interposed and induced the two belligerents to resume their togas, otherwise coats, and, in order to prevent a fisticuff discussion on the floor of the House, an adjournment was immediately obtained; and Sparks and Weaver, who had sat in their respective seats, breathing very hard and eyeing each other with thunderous looks, were conveyed out of the hall by opposite doors, each man crying, under his breath, "Just let me get at him!"

The manners of the American Congress have improved since the days of Barksdale, Keitt, and Preston S. Brooks. Let us suppose, for the sake of the argument, that it is not nearly so bad to call a fellow-member a liar, or a scoundrel, or a villain, as it would be to pull off his wig, or pound him over the head with a bludgeon. Nevertheless, it cannot be pretended that any one of these epithets is dignified or manly. It is not worth while to go into the question of accuracy of description. We cannot know if Mr. Weaver is right when he says that Mr. Sparks is a liar. And we should be sincerely sorry to be obliged to believe that Mr. Sparks is correct when he says that Mr. Weaver is "a scoundrel and a villain," as he did say yesterday. Both gentlemen (and we use this much-abused word in a strictly Congressional sense) may be quite right. The House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America must decide what are the real merits of the case—if there are any merits.

If any gentleman, a member of any respectable club in the City of New-York, were to call a fellow-member a liar, he would be expelled forthwith. If any member were to say of another member, in the club, that he was a scoundrel and a villain, he would be expelled without remedy. New-York clubs are supposed by many unsophisticated people, chiefly from Iowa, Illinois, and Brooklyn, to be sinks of infamy and toilets of domestic happiness. But it seems to be a tradition among the bad men who frequent these places, in which the first men of the world are entertained, that a club man must be, before all other things, a gentleman. In the great political club which we call the House of Representatives, men may show themselves to be blackguards, and still keep their seats.

THE TROUBLES AT THE CAPE.

When it was supposed that Sir Garnet Wolseley had ended the Zulu war, the home Government notified the colonists that thenceforth they would be expected to make arrangements for their own protection, it being felt that, so long as they knew they could expect aid from England they would be apt to pursue an aggressive and domineering policy toward the natives. This warning appears to have been disregarded, for the Gladstone Government is now face to face with the grave question whether it will stand inactively by while the colonists of England in South Africa are crying out that unless they are helped they may be pushed into the sea or massacred outright by a tumultuous uprising of Basutos, Kafirs, Hottentots, Pendoes, Griquas, Zulus, and the ignorant but sturdy, brave, and patient Dutch emigrants who occupy the lands beyond the Vaal.

The question is the more difficult to settle because it is known that the policy pursued by the Government of the Cape Colony toward the Basutos was not approved of by the colonial authorities in England. The Cape Ministry determined that the Basutos should be disarmed. The Basutos protested. They represented that they were perfectly loyal, that they had helped British troops to conquer the Zulus, and that they required their weapons for the purposes of the chase and personal defense. They even sent a deputation of their tribes to Cape Town to lay their representations before the Governor personally. All was of no avail. The fiat for disarmament went forth. The Basutos resisted it with a considerable amount of success, and the result has taken place which ought to have been foreseen by the Cape Government. Just as a fire among combustible materials is more likely to enlarge its area than to contract itself, so a rebellion among native tribes against the authority of a handful of white rulers is apt to spread into wider and wider circles.

The rebellion of the Basutos took place within the "touch" of the territory occupied by the Boers. The Boers, as a body, have never acquiesced in the diplomacy which practically made the hard-won territory of their forefathers a part of the British colonial possessions. They have always shown a marked disinclination to have anything to do with English rule, which has a peculiar absorbent tendency, as many a nation or people has found out. When the English first took possession of Cape Town many of the Dutch, rather than resign their independence, resolved to "trek" northward and found colonies in defiance alike of the hunger of wild beasts and the barbarity of hostile natives. When the English colonies gradually enlarged, the Boers, still jealous of their independence, moved further off with their cattle and wives and families. When Natal was first seized by the English they made a sturdy fight for their independence. Although they were finally defeated and compelled to enter the Transvaal, they had justice upon their side. They had suffered seriously by the treacherous conduct of successive Zulu chiefs, Chaka and Dingaan, but with indomitable pluck they not only avenged the massacres of their countrymen and countrywomen, but obtained from the Zulus a recognized footing on the soil. It was no wonder, then, that with the recollection of the blood they had shed still fresh in their minds, and with a sullen determination to be free alike in their primitive form of government and their religion, they felt the English invasion of Natal a piece of tyranny and injustice. They were compelled to retire, first from Durban and afterward from Pietermaritzburg, and finally they crossed the mountains and sought for a home among the picturesque valleys of the Transvaal regions.

Even here they were not destined to retain that independence for which they had fought again and again against both white man and black man. In 1859 they had their independence formally acknowledged by the English colonists in a convention, which was signed on the banks of the Sand River. In 1876, however, they were destined to lose that independence. They had made war, for purposes of self-protection, against Sekokuni, a powerful chief, who dwelt too near to Pretoria to be quite consistent with the safety of the Dutch families who resided in the capital. On the plea that they were absolutely unable to subdue Sekokuni, and that a victory by that chief over the Dutch emigrants would endanger the safety of the whole of the British possessions in South Africa, the English, through the instrumentality of Sir Theophilus Shepstone, annexed the entire Transvaal to British territory on the 12th of April, 1877. Two parties sprang up among the Dutch farmers when this act of policy was consummated. One protested that they would never submit to English rule, and would rather "trek" again in search of independence and a home; the other said they believed the absorption of the Transvaal into English possessions was the very best thing that could happen to the country. Many of the former kept their word, and journeyed with stout hearts into lands never before trodden by the foot of white man. Their hands had to be against every native's for the protection of their families and the possession of their sheep and cattle. Many a night, when they had laagered their camps, they knew not whether they would be alive next morning, and on the air of the wilderness broke sounds betokening a simple but complete faith in the mercy of Providence. In the character of the Boers there is a strange element of stern, sombre, religious sentiment, which has supported them amid trials as fierce and bitter as probably ever fell to the lot of any band of Christian pioneers in a strange land. Coexistent with that sentiment there has been an unflinching determination not to submit to English aggrandizement. That determination had been spreading for years past, until at last the "national" party became numerically the most powerful in the Transvaal. The "national" party have now gone into open rebellion against the rule saddled upon them by Sir Theophilus Shepstone. With a vast company of exasperated Basutos in rebellion, together with a white population which has ever shown a Puritanic determination to be free in politics as in religion, the English colonists may well appeal for assistance from the mother country. The crisis is one of no ordinary magnitude, and at the same time it is one in which it is impossible to withhold a certain amount of sympathy from the Boers, who are now striking for that freedom which they have consistently struggled for during a period extending over two centuries.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

Baron Huebner has made a great discovery. He has found out the reason why M. Gambetta, who wants to be a Conservative, is compelled to be a Radical. It is a matter of history that Gambetta has repeatedly opposed some radical measure, such as the pardon of the Communists or the war on the clergy, and has afterward turned around and supported that very measure. The explanation given by Baron Huebner is that the Frenchman is the slave of the secret societies. Years ago Gambetta joined a large and varied assortment of revolutionary and Socialistic societies, and now, whenever he wants to act like an intelligent statesman, he is solemnly warned of his secret obligations, and ordered to support the cause of Radicalism under pain of death. This explanation fully accounts for Gambetta's public course, and is as simple as Baron Huebner himself.

The public generally believes that the late Napoleon III. was also the mere creature of these terrible secret societies. It has been asserted hundreds of times that he went to war to drive the Austrians out of Italy because his former associates of the sect of the Carbonari gave him the choice between war and death. It was his delay in fulfilling his duties as a Carbonari that induced Orsini to attempt his assassination, and this attempt so frightened him that he instantly sent word to the Carbonari that if they would be so good as to give him one more chance he would make it his first business to go to war for Italy.

In this country we are told by such clear thinkers as Mr. Finney and his associates that the secret conspiracy against religion and order popularly known as Freemasonry rules and is rapidly ruining the Republic. It was Freemasonry that brought about the civil war and acquitted President Johnson, and that has committed or concealed crimes without number. This able theory of Freemasonry is not so readily believed as the theory that the European secret societies are the ruling power in Europe; but there are still many people as yet outside of the lunatic asylum who firmly believe it.

It is rather strange that nobody has attempted to explain Mr. Gladstone by asserting that he is a member of a secret society. The evidence in support of this view is very strong. Did not Lord Beaconsfield, in "Lothair," assert that no one, except himself, has any conception of the tremendous power of the secret societies, and did he not, by implication, proclaim his righteous hatred of them? Now, Lord Beaconsfield looks on Mr. Gladstone with horror, and the reason of this horror becomes plain if we assume that Mr. Gladstone himself belongs to a secret society—a fact which Lord Beaconsfield refrains from giving to the world through fear of hurting his great rival's feelings. The course of Mr. Gladstone in regard to Ireland confirms the suspicion that in his early Puseyite days he rashly joined the Irish Ribbonmen and took upon himself those awful obligations which now make him the slave of Irish revolutionists. He disestablished the Irish Church because he was ordered to do so by this baleful secret society, and he is now afraid to exercise any coercion toward the Irish Land Leaguers because the Ribbonmen have informed him that he would die a "thraitor's death" if he placed the slightest obstacle in the way of the exercise of a freeman's right to shoot his landlord. Probably Mr. Gladstone's impulses are all right, and he would prefer, as a matter of taste, that means should be taken to prevent the total extermination of landlords by shooting them out of season, but he cannot resist the Ribbonmen, to whom he is bound by his fatal oath.

Undoubtedly there are persons who will hoot at the idea that Mr. Gladstone is under the control of a pack of murderous fanatics. Perhaps they will even go so far as to assert that the Ribbon Society has been dead for fifty years, and there is no one to punish Mr. Gladstone for violating its orders, even had he ever been a Ribbonman. But similar objections might be made to the assertion that Napoleon III. was controlled by the Carbonari. As a matter of fact, the sect of the Carbonari died prior to 1832, and since that date has never had an organized existence or any secrets to be preserved. Orsini never belonged to the Carbonari, and hence his attempt at regicide could not have been the work of that extinct conspiracy. Moreover, if Napoleon did not dare to refuse to go to war with Austria when ordered to do so by the secret societies, how did he dare to make peace at Villafranca and thereby enrage to the last degree every Italian revolutionist? The truth is, there is far more reason for believing that Gladstone's policy is dictated by Irish secret societies than that Napoleon III. made war at the dictation of the Carbonari.

As for M. Gambetta, matter-of-fact people who do not regard "Lothair" as an infallible book will laugh at Baron Huebner's discovery that the secret societies control the ex-Dictator, and will regard the Baron as only less imaginative than the American Anti-Masons, who think that a parade of Knights Templar is fraught with anything more terrible than the consumption of beer and sandwiches.

Secret societies exercise very little influence in any part of the world. The French "Marianne" societies—so called, not after any actual or mythical woman, but after the guillotine, popularly known as "La Marianne"—used to meet in Paris during the Empire with the full knowledge and entire contempt of the Police. Not a political assassination of any consequence—with the sole exception of the Nihilist murders in Russia—which has taken place in Europe in the last fifty years has been traced to any secret society. The men who have tried to assassinate the Emperor William, King Humbert, and King Alfonso may have been connected with half a dozen societies, but their acts were those of individual madmen, not of societies. M. Gambetta probably cares as little for the secret societies as an intelligent American statesman cares for the Freemasons, and we might as well suppose that Mr. Hayes's policy is dictated by a lodge of the Sons of Temperance as to suppose that Gambetta's policy is dictated by the "Marianne," if that precious association still survives.

Dr. Henri Nachtel, to whom is due the night medical service in this City, has just addressed the Academy of Medicine, in Paris, in regard to our system of ambulances, having read a paper on this subject on the 20th of last month. Dr. Nachtel, who has thoroughly studied our method of transporting those suffering from accidents in New-York to the hospitals, is loud in his praises of the rapidity and efficiency with which the system is carried out. In France, the method of transporting the wounded through the streets seems to be of the most primitive kind. In Paris, when a wounded or ailing man is found, policemen take charge of the person, and he is carried to the nearest apothecary. Though Police stations abound in Paris, a person suffering from an accident is never carried there. A litter has to be hunted up, and then porters found, who transport the person either to his house or to the hospital. Before all this can be accomplished, minor accidents, for want of immediate attention, become of the most serious character. Dr. Nachtel thinks even that deaths frequently occur in Paris from want of celerity in the transporting of patients. In dwelling in a most thorough way on the many advantages of the New-York ambulance system, Dr. Nachtel expressed the hope that our method might be adopted in Paris. A commission, composed of MM. Larrey, Legouest, Vulpian, and Cherbeau, was appointed by the Académie de Medicine to study the whole subject. It would be pleasant to think that while through Dr. Nachtel's efforts we have adopted the French night medical service, he may be the means of introducing into Paris our New-York ambulance system.

The late election for Mayor of Atlanta, Ga., was in many respects the most suggestive contest of this kind which has ever taken place in the South. It was conducted in a manner entirely new to that part of the country, and it gives, more than any recent event, evidence that the white people of some portions of the cotton States are beginning to break away from the arbitrary control of their arrogant leaders and act to some extent for themselves. Mr. H. I. Kimball, who was the Republican candidate, is one of the most remarkable men in a section which is filled with so-called remarkable men. He is a Northern man in the best sense of the term, having all the energy, enterprise, and executive ability of his class. He went to Atlanta when it was not always safe for people of his stamp to fully express their mind, and yet he was always outspoken in his defense of the Union and his denunciation of every species of political fraud and outrage. Still, he fully identified himself with everything which concerned Atlanta, and he was untiring in his efforts to advance the city's interest. Indeed, it is largely due to his exertions that Atlanta is to-day, beyond all question the most progressive, thriving, and independent city in the entire South. In the local campaign just closed the Bourbon politicians took no account of these facts, but with the most intense bitterness assailed Mr. Kimball as "a Yankee," and called upon all the faithful to defeat him because he was "a Radical." To these attacks he paid no attention, but contented himself with referring to his record as a citizen of Atlanta and one of the most extensive business men in the place. The result was most satisfactory. He received the warmest support from men who were naturally his political opponents. The best citizens of Atlanta, irrespective of party, protested against the partisan attack which was made upon him, and some of the most prominent Democrats openly proclaimed their intention to secure for him a free vote and a fair count. When the polls were closed it was found that he had fallen only 54 votes short of an election. Greatly encouraged by this result, the independent men of Atlanta are confident that at the next municipal election the proscriptive Bourbon ring will be completely overthrown.

A new instrument has just been introduced to the medical profession, from the use of which we may anticipate results of great scientific importance. It is named the thermograph, and its purpose is to continuously record the changes of the temperature of the body. The principle upon which it is based is easily understood, and may be briefly explained as follows: A coiled spring is made of two lamellæ of brass and steel, the brass forming the outer part of the coil. This spring is fixed at the centre, but the free end presses gently against the contents of a short vulcanite tube. As the temperature of the apparatus rises the metal coil expands, and the pressure exerted by the free end varies and always corresponds to the temperature. The vulcanite tube is filled with a powder composed of plumbago, gas carbon, and silver, in a finely divided condition. The electrical conductivity of this mixture changes with the pressure to which it is subjected. Wires from an electric battery are connected so that the current passes through the powder, and it will therefore be understood that with the rise and fall of the temperature, and the consequent changes in the pressure of the coil upon the powder, the intensity of the current will vary. It is now only necessary to arrange a means of recording these alterations in the current, and this has been done in a very ingenious manner. A wire helix, of special construction, forms part of the circuit, and into this a soft iron core is passed, free to move up or down. The position of the core is governed by the strength of the current, and as the core rises and falls it communicates motion to an index which records its position continuously upon a moving strip of paper. The battery and the recording part of the instrument are placed in a neat cast-iron case, while the coil is inclosed in a German silver case about an inch and a quarter in diameter. To use the thermograph it is only necessary to place the little case in the axilla of the patient, and a continuous record of the temperature is thus obtained. Already the instrument has revealed a minor heat curve characteristic of typhoid fever, and the physician is therefore enabled to determine upon a diagnosis much sooner than would otherwise be possible. The course of the disease is permanently recorded, the slightest modification or variation caused by exposure or by the remedies administered being revealed, and the effect of the latter can be closely followed. Moreover, definite instructions may be left with the nurse in charge, who would be directed to watch the indicator and to be governed by it in the use of remedies. The inventor believes that the instrument will also prove to be of great service in the science of meteorology, for it will indicate and record the slightest changes in the temperature of the air, and on account of its low cost, only about $30, it can be extensively used in the Signal Service.

In the second year of the war, Mr. Jacob W. Mesnick, now member of the Legislature of Indiana, enlisted as Sergeant in Company A, Forty-second Indiana, and took with him his only son, Johnnie, then but 9 years of age, as drummer boy, and the lad was present at every action in which the regiment was engaged, and was at last duly mustered out at the mature age of 12.

The champion fish story of the season comes from Nevada, it being alleged that a party of seven men who went fishing in Pyramid Lake, and violated the provisions of the State law for the preservation of fish, had to pay fines amounting to $4,000.

A lady in Wisconsin has prepared a surprise for her husband at Christmas, and has confidentially told a few of her lady friends that she has got for him a nice box of cigars. "George," she says, "always pays $17 for his, and I've got these for $8 50."

Representative Daggett, of Nevada, has written home to deny a report that he is going to Europe, and to say that he will return to Nevada upon the expiration of his term, expecting to remain there. He has been a resident of the State nearly 30 years.

The Washington correspondent of the New-Orleans Times reports that Gen. Johnston's rejected motion to increase the appropriations for fortifications from $100,000 to $500,000, was made because of certain information he had touching our international affairs which justified such an immense increase in the current bill.

Mr. Frank Mayo was fined $10 and costs, amounting to $19 55, by the Police Court in Atchison, Kan., a few days ago, because his door-keeper refused to admit the City Clerk to the performance without a ticket. The Clerk brought the license and it was paid, and then attempted to pass in on the strength of a city ordinance which provides that the City Marshal or Clerk shall require the production of a license for shows and "see that no other thing is exhibited than that specified in the same." The door-keeper, when the demand for admission was made, told the Clerk that his instructions were to admit no one without a ticket, and that all who were rightfully entitled to admission without pay had been supplied with tickets.

AMUSEMENTS.

STEINWAY HALL.

The fourth and last of the series of concerts by Mr. Josefy, in conjunction with the orchestra of Mr. Theodore Thomas, was given last night to the largest audience that has been assembled at any of these entertainments. The absolute merits of the concert fairly justified the numerous attendance and all the applause that was bestowed. The audience was of the best musical character, attentive, appreciative, and discriminating, and the programme was not only interesting to the many musicians in the house, but was of a character to be enjoyed by any one of average cultivation who could appreciate the excellence of its selections, and the perfection of its interpretation. The first number was Moszkowsky's symphonic poem, in four parts, "Joan of Arc," which is new to our public. The first movement, an allegro, was, on a first hearing, the most enjoyable part of the work. It is, however, impossible to form an adequate judgment on a composition of the dimensions and character of this symphony without some familiarity with it, and this it is to be hoped Mr. Thomas will afford in the course of the season. It is a strong work, written in a musicianly spirit, suggestive, at least, of the source of the author's inspiration, if not plagiaristic in form and method.

Mr. Josefy followed with Chopin's F minor concerto No. 2, with the new instrumentation of Karl Klindworth, who is a highly esteemed musician of Moscow. In the form in which this concerto was played last night it was presented for the first time in New-York. Mr. Josefy never played more artistically than he did in the three movements of this work. His warmest admirers are agreed that as an interpreter of Chopin he is to be heard at his best. There is a subtle evidence of sympathy between the pianist and the composer manifest throughout. It would seem as though Chopin was born to write music for Josefy, or that Josefy was born to play Chopin's works. No such thoroughly delightful interpretations have been heard in New-York by the present generation of concert-goers, and if there be any flaws in the performance it would be a mere hypercriticism to point them out. In the second part Mr. Josefy played Handel's "Allegro et Pastorale," his own arrangement of the aria, (Pergolese,) and Rubinstein's "Etude on false notes." Each of these received distinctive treatment and were admirable examples of his wonderful finish and perfect technique. In response to the vigorous applause, in which apparently every one in the house engaged, Mr. Josefy, with his accustomed good nature, responded with some Mendelssohn "Songs without words," which he played in an original manner certainly, but in which there was too much Josefy and too much display of virtuosity and too little of the simple charm of Mendelssohn.

STANDARD THEATRE.

It is difficult to write with good nature about Mr. Campbell's new drama, "My Geraldine," produced last night at the Standard Theatre for the first time. There is a fine dramatic motive running through the piece, a motive that might have been presented with simple realism and force strength. Mr. Campbell has certainly managed to work it up into some stirring situations, and a few of the scenes in the drama are treated with skill and tenderness. "My Geraldine" was, of course, written for the popular heart; it reaches the popular heart at times and falls short of being a good play. Its story is long-winded, its sentiment far-fetched, and its merits are almost swamped in verbose commonplace. It is a drama with an essentially simple purpose, unfolded amid complex and conventional elements. It was well presented last evening, and the various climaxes produced the usual exhilarating impression. It may interest the public here for a time, but it is can only interest criticism as a work that might have been made ten-fold more real, more strong, more truthful than it is. When Mr. Campbell learns to think more of his character and of reality and less of his situation, he may write a play of higher value than "My Partner."

The cast included good material. Mr. Gotthold, Mr. Thorne, Miss Maldener, and others performed earnestly and with care, and the effect of their acting was satisfactory. The play was also set upon the stage tastefully. Mr. Campbell was called out after the climax which brings the third act to a wild and whirling termination.

GENERAL MENTION.

A special matinée performance of "The Gav'nor" will be given to-day at Wallack's Theatre.

Signor Salvini, whose repetition of his performance in "Othello" drew a very large audience to Booth's Theatre on Monday night, will make his appearance there to-night in "Sullivan," a very interesting play, well known on our stage as "David Garrick."

"La Favorita" has been substituted to-night for "Il Trovatore" at the Academy of Music in consequence of the illness of Mlle. Valleria. The cast will be the same as before, including Miss Cary as Leonora, Signor Campanini as Fernando, Signor Del Puente as Alfonso, and Signor Monti.

There will be a grand exhibition of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in this City shortly. Besides the revival at Booth's, to be brought forward next week, a popular version of the old story will be placed upon the capacious stage of the Academy of Music on next Saturday (Christmas) evening. This version will be played by the Rial & Draper Combination, a large and well-trained troupe of actors, negro performers, and vocalists. Cheap prices will be one of the delightful features of the entertainment.

An extraordinary piece of intelligence appeared in the Berliner Presidentiel of Dec. 4, which illustrates the edge that one must go away to learn the news at home. In its musical items the announcement is made that the melancholy facts in connection with the opera in New-York are that the season has been

SNOW IMPEDING TRAVEL

THE DOWN-TOWN STREETS IN A NASTY CONDITION.

A SNOW-FALL OF TWO AND A HALF INCHES—BAD WEATHER ELSEWHERE—THE MAILS DELAYED—THE THERMOMETRICAL RECORD YESTERDAY.

The storm of snow and wind which struck the City late on Monday night, continued during the greater part of yesterday. The snow did not fall deeply, but there was enough of it to give to the scene the appearance of midwinter. In crowded streets like Broadway and Pearl-st. the one or two inches of snow-fall was quickly reduced to a black sandy paste through which the wheels of the stages or passing vehicles plowed without encountering much resistance. The snow was not deep enough for a block-side, but just deep enough to be a detriment and annoyance to the tide of travel. On the sidewalks the soft white mantle which rested so quietly in the early morning was in one or two hours converted into a dirty slush streaked with layers of black and white. On the glass and iron sections of the sidewalk immediately over boilers and steam-heating apparatus the snow was quickly melted, and in its place the pavement fairly reeked with wet and steam. The cornices and angles of great buildings like the Equitable and Western Union caught the snow, and it nestled snugly in these ledges and crevices until dislodged by the wind. The richly traceried architecture and foliated spire of Trinity Church were prettily outlined by the snow, the pure white of which contrasted effectively with the dark brown of the walls. High up among the snow-clad roofs the north wind howled mournfully, blowing and whirling the white flakes into eddies and currents. A thick mist obscured the Bay to seaward, while to the north a heavy pall of smoke and fog settled densely downward, broken only by towers and buildings of unusual height.

In the broad avenues up town, the thin mantle of snow clung to the superstructure and posts of the elevated roads, and even invaded the platforms and gates of the cars. On the paved roadway below the street cars tinged alone, with no more than the usual complement of horses, which was considered quite sufficient to deal with the comparatively light snow-fall. At some street crossings and in front of many private residences and stores the snow was all removed at an early hour. Street boys and loiterers, a large proportion of whom were evidently fresh from sunny Italy, drove a brisk business in shoveling off the snow in front of private houses of the better class. From 25 cents to 50 cents was charged for this service, and there was no lack of applicants for the work. In the parks and public inclosures the snow rested white and undisturbed upon the ground, and was grouped and massed in picturesque profusion about the fountains. In streets where juveniles abounded sleds and snowballs were visible in profusion, while the air was stunned with the yelps and hootings of the exultant small boy as he mingled in snowy warfare with his rivals. In Central Park the drives, the broad lawns, the frozen lakes, and the silent woodland were sprinkled with white. The deer and other animals near the museum gazed pensively out on the broad white mantle that enwrapped and surrounded their dwelling-place. Even they appeared to realize that Winter had come in earnest.

At the Signal Service office, on the summit of the Equitable Building, it was said that the storm centre early in the morning was east of the Delaware Bay-water, and that the storm, instead of extending over the whole country, including the far West, was confined to the Atlantic coast between the Carolinas and Maine. The area of low pressure advanced from south-west to north-east while the wind blew in from the opposite direction. The snow, which began to fall in the City at 11:30 o'clock on Monday night, extended as far south as Virginia, and north into New-England, but did not reach west of the Alleghanies. At 3 o'clock in the afternoon the storm centre was at New-York, and the barometer, which had fallen from 30.08 to 29.71, began to rise. The snow-fall during the night, reduced to water measurement, was 17-100 of an inch, and during the day up to 3 o'clock, 9-100 additional, making 26-100 of an inch in all. Multiplied by 10, this gives an equivalent of a little over 2½ inches of actual snow-fall, which was about the depth in the open spaces of the City Hall Park. The temperature continued even all day, the mercury standing at 30° just before sunrise, and at 31° at high noon. The wind veered from north-east to north, blowing 16 miles an hour at midnight, 30 minutes after the snow began falling, and gradually increasing to 28 miles an hour, the highest figure reached, at 3 A. M. In the afternoon, when the heaviest portion of the storm had passed out to sea, the wind was still blowing at 21 miles an hour. The storm is probably the "cold and snowy" predicted by Vennor for about the 15th and 17th of the month, but which arrived five days or so late. The New-Jersey weather prophet, who predicted an unusually mild and open Winter, is also shown to be out of his reckoning. A feature of the storm was the relatively low temperature prevailing in the extreme South—at New-Orleans only 38°, and Montgomery, Ala., 32°, which is only a very few degrees higher than in New-York. On the other hand, during the extremely cold weather of two weeks ago, when the thermometer sank to 20° below freezing here, it touched the comparatively tropical temperature of 75° and 79° in the South-west.

The delay in the arrival of mails, consequent on the snow, was a marked feature on all the roads running into the City from the West. The New-York and Chicago mail, due at 5:35 A. M., got in at 10:30; the New-York and Pittsburg, due at 9:50 A. M., at 11:30; the New-York and Chicago, due at 11:30, arrived at 2:25, and the New-York and Pittsburg, due at 11:20, at 2:05.

Capt. Williams did a creditable piece of work last evening in clearing Broadway between the Battery and Twenty-third-street, Wall and Fulton streets, Fourteenth-street between Irving-place and Ninth-avenue, several blocks in Irving-place and Twenty-third-street between Broadway and Seventh avenue. For this work some 300 men and about 200 carts were employed. Capt. Williams divided the men into 15 sections, each in charge of a foreman, and giving each division about one-third of a mile to clean. The sweepers and scrapers were ordered to show themselves at the different posts to which they were detailed at from 5 to 5 o'clock, and the cartmen were to come an hour later, so as not to lose any time in waiting for the carts to fill. The work in the upper portion of Broadway began a little earlier so as to clear that portion in time for the numerous carriages that throng that part of the City after dark, while in the lower portion of Broadway the work of the sweepers was retarded by the snowy weather. In the evening by the trucks and other vehicles that travel through this thoroughfare. Capt. Williams started out immediately after dark, and rode up and down the entire route that was to be cleaned until the last sweeper had gone to bed and the last cart-load of snow had been dumped, examining and superintending the work. Very many of the cart-horses had already done a day's work in carting the ashes and other garbage by the dumping-places, and many of the drivers had only had time to eat a hurried supper when they were again called out to work. The snow was dumped at the nearest possible dumping-grounds, but several of these were so far from Broadway that it took the cartmen nearly an hour to dump one load and return for another. Many of the foremen had also been working the whole day, and several looked completely fagged out and sick as they stood in the piercing cold wind. But all worked with a will, and before 1 o'clock this morning nothing was left to be done. Indeed several portions of the thoroughfares were cleared as early as 10 o'clock. The first section, consisting of 30 men and 25 carts under Foreman Fisher, was detailed to the Twelfth-ward, between Twenty-first and Twenty-third streets, and that portion of Twenty-third-street between Broadway and Seventh-avenue. By 8 o'clock the Broadway portion was clean. The Twenty-third-street part was ready three hours later, and the slush was all dumped at the foot of West Twenty-first-street. Broadway, between Twenty-first and Fourteenth streets, was assigned to the second section, and the dumping-ground was at the foot of East Seventeenth-street. Thirteen carts and 15 men were employed. The streets skirting Union-square were cleared in time for the carriages of the theatre-goers as they rolled to their different places of amusement. The third section cleaned Fourteenth-street between Third-avenue and Irving-place and a distance of two blocks up the latter street. A small gang of men employed by the Christopher and Tenth street Railroad line were clearing the snow from their tracks along Fourteenth-street. The fourth section between Tenth and Fourth streets consisted of 16 men and 19 carts. Although the dumping-place was at the foot of Eleventh-street, the piles of snow heaped up by the scrapers had all disappeared by midnight, while the scrapers themselves went home by 10 o'clock. Section 5 had 30 men and 15 carts, and by 11 o'clock that part of Broadway had been cleared. The fifth section was detailed to clean Sixth-avenue, dumping the slush at the foot of Fifth-street. The gang in Wall-street had the nearest dumping ground, at the foot of that street and at 11:30 o'clock that entire street had been cleared. The work on Fulton-street between Broadway and Fulton Ferry was also rapidly carried on.

The outlook late last night for clear weather was excellent. The temperature remained about stationary, the reading at 11 o'clock being 31° against 30° at 9 P. M., but the barometer had risen rapidly from 29.79 at 9 o'clock to 29.89 at 11 o'clock. The wind was north-west, 19 miles an hour, and the clouds in the sky were rapidly breaking. It was plain that the brunt of the storm had passed, and the presence of any decided barometric or thermometric change in the west was considered favorable to a continuance of fair, or at least settled, weather. The snow-fall after 4 o'clock was extremely light, the instrument registering 3-100 of an inch, which in addition to the 26-100 which had fallen earlier in the day, made a total of 29-100, equal to 2½ inches of snow, or about the same quantity as fell in Washington or Baltimore.

THE STORM'S WORK AND EXTENT.

LONG BRANCH, N. J., Dec. 21.—The most violent wind and snow-storm that has visited this coast since 1876 set in last night and still continues. The wind is blowing at the rate of 30 miles an hour, and the snow-drifts are from five to seven feet in high. The track of the New-Jersey Southern Railroad is blocked, and two engines and a passenger train bound north are snowed in between here and Bay Head, a distance of 10 miles. All travel by horse and sleigh is stopped.

The greatest damage known thus far is to the Long Branch iron pier. About 9 o'clock this morning the heavy sea undermined the foot of the iron columns, and as they were set free from the sand broke upper ends from the flooring and sank into the sea. At 10 o'clock to-night 30 of the columns had fallen and the outer end of the balcony was falling into the raging surf. At the hour of writing the sound of breaking timbers is heard across the shore, but it is too dark to ascertain the full extent of the damage.

A wreck is reported ashore at Seabrights, but the wires are down and no authentic information can be obtained. Some of the passengers on the north bound train on the New-Jersey Southern, snowed in at Branchport, were taken to Howland's Central Hotel at Long Branch, and lodged at the expense of the railroad company, while others refused to leave the cars, and have a fair prospect of staying there all night. The train over the Second Brook route from Philadelphia was 18 minutes late at Elizabethport, and trains on the Long Branch division were from two to ten minutes behind. There is a heavy drift at Little Silver. The Southern Railway Company has sent lunches to the passengers in the snowed-in train, and a large number of men and extra engines are trying to get them out. Efforts are being made to repair the wires toward Seabright.

FREDERICKSBURG, Va., Dec. 21.—Snow has fallen in Northern Virginia for 24 hours without intermission. Travel has been impeded, and trees have been broken down by the weight of the snow. A storm of such severity has not been experienced for 20 years.

PETERSBURG, Va., Dec. 21.—The snow-storm that began yesterday continues, the flakes falling rapidly. The sleighing is good. The storm extends far beyond the North Carolina line, and there are no indications of its clearing up.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—A snow-storm set in here at about 11 o'clock yesterday morning, and continued at intervals throughout the day. It snowed heavily during the night, and still continues. The ground is now covered to the depth of eight inches.

NEWPORT, R. I., Dec. 21.—A severe snow-storm prevails here. Owing to the storm the United States sloop-of-war Powhattan will not start for New-York this morning as was intended.

FRESHPORT, Long Island, Dec. 21.—Fifteen inches of snow fell here to-day, and to-night it is still snowing fast. The storm is the severest that has visited this part of Long Island in several years.

BORDENTOWN, N. J., Dec. 21.—The snow is nearly a foot deep on a level here, and three feet deep in drifts, causing trains to be late in reaching stations. While the 8:30 A. M. train from Philadelphia, on the Camden and Burlington County Railroad, was passing over a trestle bridge at Moorestown, the roof of the bridge, which was laden with snow, fell upon the engine, slightly injuring the engineer, Joseph Carman, of Burlington.

THE WEATHER INDICATIONS.

Cautionary off-shore signals continue at Macon, Cape Lookout, Hatteras, Kitty Hawk, Cape Henry, Norfolk, Chincoteague, Breakwater, Cape May, Atlantic City, Barnegat, Sandy Hook, and New-York.

A MEDAL FOR THE OBELISK.

FROM THE AMERICAN NUMISMATIC AND ARCHÆOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

At a meeting of the American Numismatic and Archæological Society, held yesterday at Lafayette-place, Prof. Charles A. Anthon presiding, the business transacted was of a most interesting character. Commander Gorringe was present. The Vice-President, Mr. Hewitt, presented the model of a medal prepared by Mr. G. L. Feuardent and Mr. Charles Osborne, commemorative of the erection of the obelisk in New-York. The design is an obelisk, and at its base, on two shields, are the arms of New-York and of the United States. In the centre of the medal there is a rising sun, emblematic not only of the worship of the Egyptians, but of the leading feature in the shield of New-York. The motto which surrounds it is Diutiquius est priori posterior dies, an iambic from Publius Syrus, to be freely translated, "Let to-morrow profit by the lesson of yesterday." On the reverse is, "Quarried at Syene, and erected at Heliopolis B. C. 1540. Removed to Alexandria and erected there B. C. 23. Removed to New-York by Lieut. Com'd'r H. H. Gorringe, and erected there under his direction A. D. 1880. E. B. Hayes, President." The committee to arrange form and details of this medal are Messrs. Hurlbut, Stebbins, Sullivan, and Hewitt. The society fully indorse the character of this highly artistic medal. It is understood that in order to commemorate the event a certain number of these medals will be struck and distributed as prizes among the leading pupils at the public schools in the City. During the course of the evening, Mr. G. L. Feuardent exhibited some coins, stating that Commander Gorringe either had numismatic prescience or was very lucky, as he had succeeded in bringing over to this country some very rare and remarkable coins. It was Commander Gorringe who, happening to visit Cyrenaica, had brought to New-York one of the rarest of the coins of Ptolemy, which, unfortunately, did not remain in this country, but was disposed of to the British Museum. The coins now presented for examination by the society were for the major part Egyptian. One was the double stater in gold of Ptolemy, another was a small gold coin of the successor of Alexander to the throne of Egypt, which was of great artistic beauty. The collection also contained a coin of Queen Arsinoe, widow of Lysimachus and of Ptolemy Ceraunus, sister of Ptolemy Philadelphus. One large gold piece in splendid order represented on the obverse the portrait of the Queen, with veil and diadem, and on the reverse a double horn of plenty. A silver coin was also of the period of Arsinoe, and was scarcer than the gold one. Both these coins showed the refining influence of Greek art. Notwithstanding the eventful life of the Queen, she must have retained during a long period her beauty. As remarkable as any piece in the Gorringe collection was one of Ptolemy III. In wonderful preservation, and among the handsomest in the Greco-Egyptian collection, but the very rarest of them all, in gold, was the one of Berenice. On one side of the coin was a figure of the Queen veiled, sister and wife of Ptolemy Evergetes. This coin, which in weight would be worth about $80, Mr. Feuardent said museums abroad would be glad to purchase for $200. The bronze coins were equally remarkable, but there was one which Mr. Feuardent stated was quite unique, struck at Alexandria, and commemorative of Queen Zenobia, the value of this coin, about as large as a nickle, was estimated to be about the same as for the gold coin of Berenice. One large bronze medal bore the bust of Æilus Cæsar, Hadrianus's favorite; one small coin of Commodus was curious from having on it a vessel sailing toward the Pharos, the light-house of those days. Later in the evening Mr. Feuardent made some further interesting remarks on the origin of obelisks. After reviewing what is known of their history and pointing out that the motive for their invention was still a mystery, he proposed a comparison between the large and small obelisks and the sacred stones worshiped by the ancient Greeks. He combated the suggestions of those authors who held that these sacred stones were aerolites, because traces of man's handiwork could be found on them. Before archæology was understood, the belief was held that celts such as were discovered by peasants in the ground after rainstorms, were stones hurled from heaven, and these were called "thunder-stones." It was evident, he thought, that the old Greeks and Egyptians, on finding such prehistoric stones, worshiped them, believing them to be of divine origin. Several celts of wedge-like form were exhibited. It was from these primitive forms, Mr. Feuardent thought, that obelisks were first shaped; they represented the prehistoric axis, only increased in grandeur and proportion.

DR. MAYO'S ILLNESS.

Dr. William S. Mayo has been for some days seriously ill of pleuro-pneumonia at his residence, No. 609 Fifth-avenue. Fears are entertained that he may not recover. Dr. Mayo is known in the literary world as the author of "Kaloolah" and "Never Again"; but it is chiefly in the most reserved circles of New-York society that the news of his illness will awaken concern.

THE BRUSH ELECTRIC LIGHT.

The 15 Brush electric lights on Broadway, and the five at the Fifth Regiment Armory continued burning brightly through the snow-storm of Monday night and Tuesday morning, and were not extinguished until broad daylight. Last night the experiment was renewed, and Broadway was again lit up with the 15 lights, which in intensity and brilliancy showed no signs of diminution. The light is a pale, brilliant white, suggestive of moonlight intensified, and it burns clearly and steadily. The carbons are well shaded and protected by glass, so that it is impossible for either snow or rain to affect them. Secretary A. A. Hayes, Jr., General Superintendent Shealy, and the other officers express themselves as more than satisfied with the results of Monday night, and they'll continue to light Broadway from Fourteenth-street to Twenty-sixth-street, and eventually to Thirty-fourth-street, until further notice. The engine in West Twenty-fifth-street was running at full power at 10 o'clock last night, and the dynamo and circuits were in full blast, lighting up not only the 20 lights in Broadway and the armory already mentioned, but some 13 more in the operating-room.

WEDDING AT ST. BARTHOLOMEW.

MR. E. R. VANDERHOEF TO THE DAUGHTER OF COMMODORE THOMAS.

At 8 o'clock last evening, at St. Bartholomew's Church, Madison-avenue, corner of Forty-fourth-street, Miss Fanny J. Thomas, daughter of Commodore William H. Thomas, of the New-York Yacht Club, was united in marriage to Mr. Harmon B. Vanderhoef, son of Nathaniel S. W. Vanderhoef, of No. 35 West Forty-fifth-street, senior member of the Broadway straw house that bears his name. The bride wore a costume of white satin, over which fell the transluscent folds of the bridal veil. She was attended by six brides-maids, in white satin and silk, namely: Miss McAlpine, Miss Vanderhoef, sister of the groom; Miss Giles, Miss Thomas, her cousin, and the Misses Dodd, of Newark, N. J. Each carried a large bouquet of roses, the counterpart of that of the bride. Six young gentlemen acted as ushers and escorted the invited guests to the pews assigned them on either hand of the middle aisle, beyond the silken cord that on such occasions separates the invited few from the uninvited many. They were Mr. F. Thomas, brother of the bride; Mr. G. W. Vanderhoef, brother of the groom; Mr. George McAlpine, Mr. William Dodd, and the Messrs. Pyle. Mr. J. R. McAlpine acted as best man. The arrangements at the church were under the charge of Mr. William C. Howitt, whose superintendence of details was highly complimented. The reception which succeeded the ceremony, at the residence of Commodore and Mrs. Thomas, No. 8 East Forty-fifth-street, was attended by a large concourse of fashionable guests. The floral decorations were, upon the scale of profusion and magnificence that appears to be the rule this season; a band of music enlivened the pauses of conversation; the presents were numerous and elegant, with some unique designs from friends of the owner of the Rambler. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. Nathaniel S. W. Vanderhoef, the groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. D. H. McAlpine, Major R. A. McAlpine and wife, the Misses Brandreth, Mr. and Mrs. Dodd, of Newark, N. J., and the Misses Dodd, Mrs. Fargo, Miss Fargo, Miss McAlpine, Mr. and Mrs. Pyne, Mr. and Mrs. Baldwin and family, Mr. and Mrs. William Clark, Mr. Smythe, Mr. Daniel Chauncey and wife, Mr. and Mrs. George Chauncey, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Chauncey, Jr., Mr. H. Chauncey, Mrs. Halpine, the Misses Halpine, Lieut. Halpine, and Mr. Hall. Carriages were ordered at 11 o'clock P. M.

HOSPITAL SATURDAY AND SUNDAY ASSOCIATION.
The German Hospital and Dispensary, in the City of New-York, is one of the institutions participating in this charity. A hospital collection so takes place next Saturday and Sunday. The Trustees call upon its friends and patrons for liberal contributions to the external fund, so that their share may become as large as possible.
The work of our institution has been as following: 902,891 patients were treated in the dispensary from Sept. 15, 1869, to Jan. 1, 1880, and since then to Dec. 1, 1880, over 30,000. In the hospital, 6,601 were treated from Sept. 15, 1869, to Jan. 1, 1880, and to date nearly 1,000 more. The present number of sick amounts to 58, of which 12 are paying, 6 in part paying, and 70 free patients. The annual expense for the support of the institution exceeds $30,000, of which only $2,000 are derived from studied investments, and the rest has to be supplied by voluntary contributions and gifts. In view of these facts, we feel justified in joining our sister institutions in their appeals to the liberality and charity of our fellow-citizens. Collections will be made on Saturday, the 25th, in all the synagogues, and on Sunday, the 26th, in all the Protestant churches. Collection-boxes will be placed in the principal factories, the leading hotels and restaurants, the public buildings, ferry-houses, and elevated railroad stations. Subscription-lists are now circulating in all the Exchanges and among the business men, and we trust that the result will exceed that of last year in proportion to the increased efforts.
By order of the Board of Trustees,
WILLY WALLACH, President.

WE ARE AUTHORIZED TO RECEIVE subscriptions for a limited amount (not exceeding $2,500,000) of the capital stock of the

in shares of one hundred dollars each.
This Company is building, and will have in readiness for the coming Summer season, a large fleet of Iron Steam-boats, especially adapted for the requirements of passengers, of great speed, constructed in the most substantial manner, non-combustible, and with numerous water-tight compartments, which will render them incapable of sinking. Contrasted with the ordinary wooden steam-boats, they cannot fail to commend, at highly remunerative rates, the patronage of the great majority of the traveling public.
THE COMPANY HAS ENTERED INTO CONTRACTS EXTENDING OVER A TERM OF YEARS, UNDER WHICH IT HAS ACQUIRED THE EXCLUSIVE RIGHT TO CONVEY PASSENGERS FROM NEW-YORK AND ITS VICINITY TO THE IRON PIER AT CONEY ISLAND, AND A SIMILAR EXCLUSIVE RIGHT TO CONVEY PASSENGERS TO CONEY ISLAND IN CONNECTION WITH ONE OF THE LEADING RAILROADS TO THAT PLACE. IN VIEW OF THE VAST NUMBER OF PEOPLE WHO VISIT THIS FAMOUS SUMMER RESORT, IT IS EVIDENT THAT A LINE OF STEAMBOATS POSSESSING THESE EXCLUSIVE PRIVILEGES, CONSTRUCTED IN SUCH MANNER AS TO COMMAND THE HIGHEST DEGREE OF PUBLIC CONFIDENCE, AND FURNISHED IN RESPONSE TO AN URGENT PUBLIC DEMAND, MUST AT ONCE PROVE VERY PROFITABLE.
THE CONTRACTS ALREADY ENTERED INTO WILL INSURE TO THIS COMPANY FROM THE OUTSET A BUSINESS LIMITED ONLY BY ITS CAPACITY, AND ARRANGEMENTS ARE IN COURSE OF COMPLETION WITH THE ERIE AND PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD COMPANIES UNDER WHICH IT WILL ACQUIRE, IN ADDITION, A LARGE AND PROFITABLE EXCURSION BUSINESS. THE COMPANY WILL EXTEND ITS OPERATIONS AS RAPIDLY AS EXCLUSIVE AND PROFITABLE CONNECTIONS CAN BE CONSUMMATED.
DURING THE WINTER MONTHS IT IS THE INTENTION OF THE COMPANY TO UTILIZE ITS BOATS IN SOUTHERN WATERS, SO FAR AS THEY CAN BE PROFITABLY EMPLOYED.
The Company is organized under the Laws of New-Jersey, and subscribers to the stock will incur no liability beyond the obligation to pay the amount of their subscriptions.
We recommend this investment as one promising large returns, and well worthy the attention and confidence of the most careful investors.
Each subscriber will receive for every $1,000 of stock allotted and paid for First Mortgage Bonds of the Company (bearing interest at 6 per cent.) to the amount of $500.
The terms of the subscription are as follows:
Ten per cent. on allotment.
Ten per cent. Feb. 1, 1861.
Ten per cent. March 4, 1861.
Ten per cent. April 8, 1861.
Ten per cent. May 3, 1861.
and the remainder in installments of not exceeding 10 per cent. on 20 days' notice previously given. Receipts will be given for each payment, and the Bonds and Certificates of stock will be issued upon the payment of the final installment.
Subscriptions will be received at the offices of either of the undersigned from Dec. 22 inst. until Jan. 12, 1861.

LOCAL POLITICAL WORK.

THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE'S LAST MEETING.

THE SEVENTEENTH ASSEMBLY DISTRICT—SOME STATEMENTS ABOUT THE RECENT ALDERMANIC ELECTION.

The Republican Central Committee of 1880 held its closing meeting for the year last evening in Republican Hall. The attendance was light, but little interest being manifested in the business of a committee so soon to be superseded. "I move that Judge Smith call the roll," said Alderman Perley. At this suggestion there was loud applause, and Justice Smith, who had conducted himself with becoming gravity, floated up to the roots of his hair and drove his glasses deep into the folds of a report to conceal his embarrassment. Fortunately, he was relieved by a motion, which was carried, to dispense with the calling of the roll. Police Commissioner Mason reported from the Executive Committee, that an organization had been completed in that part of the Ninetepath Assembly District included in the Twelfth Ward. Under instruction, he asked the committee to recommend its action in asking the State Committee to reorganize the party in the Twenty-second District, circumstances having arisen which made it unnecessary to adopt such a course. The motion to reconsider was adopted, and the resolution having been reconsidered, it was unanimously rejected. Several appeals from expelled members were read and referred to the Executive Committee. A report received from a committee through Robert O'N. Ford, of the Twenty-first District, in regard to the vote on district Aldermen, was read and referred to the Executive Committee. The report stated that some of the election districts of the Seventeenth Assembly District had been reported as failing to run out Aldermanic tickets with the names of both candidates upon them. It was said that while Henry J. Robinson and John McClave were the candidates in the Twelfth Election District, only John McClave's name appeared on the tickets. In the Fourteenth Election District of the Seventeenth Assembly, the ballot contained two names, but that of Henry J. Robinson was stricken off. In the Twenty-seventh Election District of the Seventeenth Assembly, only John McClave's name appeared on the tickets. The name of John McClave only appeared on the tickets in the Fourth Election District in the Eighth Election District the same complaint was made; in the Thirteenth with names had been printed on the tickets, and that of H. J. Robinson had been scratched out; in the Thirty-second the name of John McClave was the only one upon the tickets. It was represented by Charles J. Martin, of the Twenty-fifth Election District, that the names of the two candidates appeared upon the posters at the booths, but only McClave's name was upon the tickets, and that the man at the booth said there was only one name to be voted for and that it was so decided at the district head-quarters. In the Fourth Election District only McClave's name was voted. The committee recommended that a report be made of the failure of the Seventeenth Assembly District to support both candidates, and that measures be taken to correct and prevent such failures in the future.

Commissioner Mason, in behalf of the Seventeenth District, in speaking on the question said: "I say as a Republican, and as one of the Representatives of the district, that reports have been circulated detrimental to the character and standing of the Seventeenth District. I will prove, if the facts can be shown, as to the vote, and all members of the committee have the opportunity of obtaining that and satisfying themselves. We sent out a circular to each registered voter stating that there were two candidates, and describing the two men fairly and fairly. This circular went to every single man in the district."

Justice Smith—How about the married men, Mason?

Col. Mason—If I stand corrected Judge; and to every married man.

Col. Mason then read the circular, and added that it was sent to every voter, together with a ballot containing both names, and that tickets containing both names were bunched and sent out for distribution in good faith; and that no other ballot should be used. Postal cards were sent out the day before election, and one came into his possession, stating that but one Republican could be elected in the district, and that one must be defeated. "As a Republican," said this postal card "you are requested to vote the single ticket for H. J. Robinson, and strike out the name of John McClave, who has not earned the confidence of his constituents." The effect of this postal card on many members of the association, to whom it appeared at a late on the 11th, was to induce them to refuse to vote for Robinson, but so far as the officers of the association were able they prevented it, and were faithful to Mr. Robinson. Whatever opposition was developed was individual opposition, and the movement for Mr. Robinson lost him votes in the last ward. Mr. W. H. Cooper corroborated Col. Mason's statement, and said that the opposition to Mr. Robinson indicated a determination to vindicate Mr. McClave.

On motion of Mr. W. H. Bellamy, of the Nineteenth District, a vote of thanks was tendered to the officers of the Assembly District in 1880, and the Central Committee then adjourned. The next meeting will be that of the new committee, when a new presiding officer and other officers will be elected.

THE IRVING HALL PRIMARIES.

A LARGE VOTE POLLED—THE LEADERS SATISFIED WITH THE RESULT.

The Irving Hall primaries, under the new plan of organization, were held last evening in each of the 678 election districts of the City, and the leaders of the party were highly pleased at the unusual turn-out of voters, many of whom for the first time in their lives were permitted to vote at a primary election. Thousands of New-Yorkers can recall the difficulties which they have met in attempting to vote at such elections, where shoulder-hitters were on guard, and where everything had been "cut and dried" by rascally politicians. Respectable persons were driven away from these primaries, and the "heelers" had every thing their own way. It is claimed by those who proposed the plan under which the primaries were held last evening that there could be no underhand work; that everyone knew where and when to vote; that there were no printed lists of delegates to the Assembly District Committee to be voted for. Every voter gave his name as he entered the room where the primary election was held, and either wrote himself, or had written for him, in a form provided for the purpose, his name and residence, and then voted for any one he pleased—one who lived in the election district, of course—for delegate to the Assembly District Committee. The name of the man of his choice was written on the same line with his own. According to the plan, "There shall be elected in each election district one delegate to the Assembly District Committee of the district for every 100 votes, and for any fractional part of 100 votes exceeding 60 cast in such election district for the Democratic Electoral ticket at the Presidential election next preceding; but each election district shall be entitled to at least one delegate."

There were contests in the Seventh, Twelfth, Fourteenth, and other Assembly districts. Owing to the slowness in which the returns were received at the various head-quarters, the result of the vote and the names of the new district delegates could not be ascertained last night. It was pretty well understood, however, that Mayor Cooper, Commissioner Robert O. Thompson, Justice Morgan J. O'Brien, Joy Fowler, Thomas Costigan, and others who have been prominently identified with the Irving Hall organization were elected delegates to the district committees. The John Fox Democrats were severely left in the cold, and it is believed that Mr. Fox's friend, of the ex-Senator's affinity received sufficient votes to carry them through and place them on the committee. In the First Assembly District Congressman Nicholas Muller was elected in his own election district by a large majority, and Assembly district friends of Mr. Muller were elected delegates. All the Assembly district committees are to meet on Friday evening for organization.

THE TWO SIDES OF A BAR-TENDER'S CASE.

Jacob Ockelman, a bar-tender for F. Frease, of No. 202 West Tenth-street, was accused of larceny yesterday in the Jefferson Market Police Court. Frease made the complaint, and swore that Ockelman on the 17th inst. stole from a box $18 in money, a ring, and other articles. He searched him when he was about to leave the place on Saturday, and found the ring in his possession. Ockelman, who was defended by Col. C. S. Spencer, pleaded not guilty. He worked for Frease for $15 a month, and had been with him for three months, but had only received 25 cents, while he had lent his employer $20. On Friday, in the presence of Frease's wife, he took the ring from the box, and said he would like to wear it at the fair of the 71st Regiment, of which he is a member. Mrs. Frease did not object, and he wore the ring with her knowledge and that of her husband until Saturday, when Frease took it from him. Frease did not, however, cause his arrest. On Monday Ockelman demanded his wages and the money he lent Frease, and not receiving them, he, through a lawyer, procured a summons for Frease in a civil court suit. The summons was served, and Ockelman says that Frease, in revenge, went to Officer Wallace, of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, and had him arrested on Monday night while he was in full uniform and on duty at the fair. Justice Wandell said the action of the officer was as unnecessary as for the Fifth Regiment. Mrs. Frease denied that she allowed Ockelman to wear the ring, and Justice Wandell was compelled to commit Ockelman, who still wore his uniform.

THE ST. VINCENT'S HOSPITAL FAIR.

A fair in aid of the St. Vincent Hospital will commence to-morrow evening in the Twenty-second Regiment Armory, in Fourteenth-street, near Sixth-avenue, under the auspices of the Sisters of Charity. Prominent among its many attractions will be a gallery of choice paintings, a costly collection of bric-a-brac, a service of silver ewers and salver, presented by the late Emperor Maximilian while in Mexico, an autograph letter of George Washington, and a large number of rare and valuable articles, the gift of Mr. John Fox for the benefit of the hospital. The Sisters in charge of the hospital feel that during the past year their exertions have hardly exceeded the means at their disposal, and they hope that the liberality and generosity for which this city is so proverbial will be exercised in their behalf on this well-known and deserving charity. The institution is not sectarian. Its doors are always open to the destitute sick, without regard to nationality or creed, and, as shown by its annual report for the year ending Oct. 1, 1879, the whole number of patients treated amounted to 1,464, of which 1,286 were entirely free, 178 paid in part, and only 161 subdivisions, those in private rooms, were paying patients. William F. Donnelly is Chairman of the Executive Committee.

KILLED AT A RAILROAD DEPOT.

THE RESULT OF BEING FORCED TO CROSS THE TRACK TO BOARD A TRAIN.

Snow was falling thickly in Bristol, Penn., at 7:45 o'clock yesterday morning as the western train of the Pennsylvania Railroad approached the depot there on its way to Jersey City, two hours and forty-five minutes behind time. A local train, consisting of a locomotive and three cars, stood on the track for westbound trains in readiness to convey passengers to Philadelphia and intermediate stations. In order to board it the people, mostly clerks and working men, were obliged to cross the track leading eastward. But, heedless of the alarm bell of the western train, the throng pressed forward over the rails. Some of them got across, but not all, for the western train ran into a number of them, throwing them 30 feet against the stone depot, and wounding one man fatally and severely injuring three others. George Wave, a salesman in the Star Woolen Mills, of Bristol, was so badly injured internally that he died six hours later. Andrew O'Donnell and Frank O'Donnell, his son, both laborers, bound for one of the way stations near Philadelphia, were cut on the head, and Patrick Huston, also a working man, received similar injuries. It is believed that Andrew O'Donnell cannot survive. The wounded men, who are residents of Bristol, were taken to their homes and attended by the railroad company's physicians.

On the arrival of the train at Jersey City yesterday forenoon, the engineer, J. Rulon, who has been connected with the railroad a long time, and is regarded as an efficient, careful employe, went to the office of the Superintendent and made a statement, of which the subjoined is the substance: He was running his engine at a slow rate of speed on account of the storm, and, fearing that as a consequence of his being behind time he would encounter freight trains "drifting" near the Bristol Depot, he began to "slow up" on nearing that point. When about a train's length from the canal, which is 800 feet westward of the station, he applied the air-brakes, meanwhile keeping the alarm bell ringing. Immediately after passing the Mill-street he saw the Assistant Train Master standing on the platform waving a red flag—the signal to stop. Applying the brakes as tightly as he could, he at once reversed his engine, but it did not stop until the head of the locomotive had gone 400 feet beyond the station, when the rear car close to the end of the waiting local train. Rulon says the men were not struck by the cow-catcher, but thrown off while pressing against the side of the locomotive. As the time it was impossible to see objects situated over 150 feet away owing to the thickness of the snow-flakes. He did not use the whistle on entering the depot for the reason that the law prohibits whistling while trains are proceeding through cities. Statements of a like character were made by the conductor and fireman. The Assistant Train Master at Bristol telegraphed a corroborative explanation of the affair, convincing the Superintendent that the train hands were entirely blameless.

A TWENTY-FIVE CENT BANQUET.

MRS. AMELIA LEWIS FEEDS THE HUNGRY MEMBERS OF THE FARMERS' CLUB.

Mrs. Amelia Lewis gave a dinner to the members of the American Institute Farmers' Club, in her rooms at No. 704 Broadway, yesterday, to show them what a sumptuous repast can be prepared for 25 cents a head by her new style of economical cookery. The farmers came in from their farms on Madison-avenue, Division-street, and the Boulevard, with wisps of hay sticking out of their pockets, and loaded down with samples of patent turnip and pumpkin-seeds. There were about 50 ladies and gentlemen present, including Dr. A. S. Heath, Robert J. Dodge, Dr. J. F. Garrish, W. H. Schermerhorn, B. H. Martin, B. H. Cotter, the "Poet Laria" of Mark Twain's "Innocents Abroad," Dr. T. S. Lambert, the ex-President of the ex-American ex-Popular Life or Death Insurance Company, and Mary Dana Shindler, the distinguished authoress of the well-known poem entitled "Passing Under the Rod." The bill of fare was as follows:

Soup à la beef, à la onion, potatoes, turnips, rice, and tomatoes.
Codfish, lobster sauce.
Roast beef.
Gravy.
Potatoes, beets, boiled rice, stewed onions.
Entree—Salt mustard, pepper, vinegar.
Bread, butter.
Stewed mutton.
Rice duff. Plum pudding. Bread pudding.

The farmers cleared everything before them, and then, instead of paying their 25 cents apiece, passed a vote of thanks. The banqueting-hall was decorated with match-boxes, tin teapots, frying pans, skillets, gridirons, and other kitchenry. There were some speeches after the dinner, and Secretary Martin gave his opinion of parsnip culture on the Sierras.

LAYTON'S TRIAL POSTPONED.

The court-room at Hackensack, in which Judge Dixon sat for the trial of Oyer and Terminer cases, was crowded yesterday with a throng gathered to hear the evidence in the case of the State against Charles W. Layton. Layton, who is a son of City Weigher Layton, of New-York City, had, on two occasions, secured an entrance into the house of David W. Price, a wealthy gentleman of middle age, living two miles out of Hackensack village, and the Grand Jury had indicted him first for breaking and entering by night with the intention of assaulting Mr. Price, and a second time for breaking and entering by day with the same end in view. The trial of the accused on one of the bills had been set down by Judge Dixon for trial yesterday, and there was promise that the evidence would be racy and interesting. Soon after the opening of the court, District Attorney Campbell arose and said he was not prepared to go on with the case. Mrs. Price, who is a material witness for the State, was ill and unable to appear. The counsel for the prisoner asked that the trial be postponed for the term. He presented to the court a certificate from Dr. Hopper saying that the prisoner was at the time suffering great mental excitement, and that he is subject to fits of epilepsy. His condition was such that a trial at this time would be perilous for him. In view of the certificate Judge Dixon decided to put off the case for the term. He fixed Layton's bail at $600 on each indictment. Layton's friends placed $1,000 in the hands of Albert Smith, a Hackensack butcher, who became surety for his appearance at the ensuing term of court, and yesterday afternoon he returned to his home in Brooklyn.

A VERDICT FOR PINGS & PINNER.

The case of the United States against Pings & Pinner, which occupied six weeks in trial before Judge Choate, in the United States District Court, was ended yesterday by the jury rendering a general verdict in favor of the defendants, and expressly finding that they discovered no undervaluation in any of the defendants' invoices. The suit was brought to recover forfeiture of goods and penalties aggregating about $400,000, the Government alleging that the defendants had willfully defrauded the United States of revenue by undervaluing invoices of kid gloves imported from Europe and passed through the Custom-house in this City. United States Attorney Woodford made a motion yesterday before the court for a stay of proceedings and a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was not conformable to the evidence, and that the court erred in certain points in charging the jury. The motion will be argued in January next.

INDUCTING LIQUOR-DEALERS.

For some time liquor-dealers in the town of Westchester have been doing business without regard to law. Only about one in five complies with the law in taking out licenses. These, together with the unlicensed dealers, have been keeping their places open every day and night in the week, including Sundays, and on Sundays have done their largest business, the front doors being kept open. This disregard of law having gone to such an extent that it was no longer endurable, a number of citizens have organized themselves into a society known as the "Westchester Protective Improvement Association," its object being to stop the wholesale traffic in intoxicating liquors. The Westchester County Grand Jury all this week have been considering the cases of about 50 dealers, and the probability is that all will be indicted. About 100 witnesses have been in attendance to give testimony against them.

THE BOOTBLACKS' CHRISTMAS.

A gentleman who writes THE TIMES that he expects to enjoy a good dinner on Christmas, (and here's hoping that it may be a real good one, and digest well,) incloses a check for $50 to help along the Christmas dinner for the poor newsboys and bootblacks who were described in last Sunday's TIMES. The money will be sent to the Children's Aid Society to add to the stock of turkeys and puddings that will be consumed by the little arabs in the Newsboys' Lodging-house on Saturday. If this generous gentleman were not too modest to have his name made known, he may be sure the grateful boys would pause long enough in the midst of their Christmas feast to give him a hearty cheer.

HOW MRS. ZOLER WAS ACQUITTED.

Mrs. Caroline Zoler was brought up yesterday before Judge Walsh, in Brooklyn, on a charge of throwing red pepper in the eyes of Henry Schwenker, of No. 47 Male-street. Counsel for the defendant claimed that Schwenker had greatly incensed Mrs. Zoler. The court granted a motion to discharge Mrs. Zoler on the ground that she had acted in the presence and under duress of her husband, and was not, therefore, responsible. A charge of assault was then preferred against the husband, and Mrs. Zoler testified that her husband was not present when she threw the red pepper in Schwenker's eyes. No testimony being offered in contradiction, Zoler was acquitted.

Sanitary Inspector Wilder reported yesterday to the Board of Health that in the course of his examination of the causes of typhoid fever he had found that in the majority of cases the disease was not true typhoid fever, but a low form of fever resulting from debility and poor living. Cases of this nature were chiefly found in those sections of the City on the East Side, below Second-street, which are inhabited by poor people. The report was referred to the Sanitary Committee.

The Assessment Commission met yesterday in Mayor Cooper's office, and listened to H. L. Sprague as counsel for Hiram A. Crane, who wants to have vacated an assessment made against his property for laying a drain in King's Bridge road near Inwood. The lawyer asked whether the petitioner or the City would have to pay witness fees, and was told that the City had nothing to do with that matter. He then asked for a future hearing, which was granted, and the commission then adjourned until Jan. 17. Ex-Controller John Kelly occupied his seat as one of the Commissioners.

The semi-annual auction sale of Custom-house seized goods took place yesterday. The assortment offered was not up to the general average, but there was a larger attendance than usual, and the prices realized were fully up to, and in some cases beyond, the value of the articles. Among the curiosities of the sale were a number of prayer-books which brought 40 cents apiece, Swiss gold watches of no particular excellence sold at $35 50 to $51 each; black silk at $1 55 to $4 10 per yard; cigars at $35 to $110 per 1,000, and so on. The total receipts were estimated at about $7,000.

The president of the board was directed to co-operate with the Sanitary Inspectors in this investigation.
